Before the Show - Brian found out Dexter is a killer just like him and analysed his methods hence what Dexter liked. We can be sure of this, as the Ice Truck Killer shown thorough the series that he knows Dexter is a killer, and as in their reunion it's stated that, he was glad to see that Dexter is the same as him, a killer.

Upon realising it, and wanting to be reunited, he first needed to get Dexter's undivided attention so he'll be on his mind more than anyone else.

Note: A lot of these will have purposes for Public and for Dexter separately. For Public is for Media, Police etc.

First Act: Brian started killing in the open so he'll be noticed. And while that's opposite of Dexter's method detail, Brian left his victims spotless and without the blood, with perfect and precise cuts. This fascinated Dexter and made him invested in the case despite there being no blood whatsoever.

For Public: Being drained of blood, cleaned up and chopped up made Brian almost impossible to track for the police while also becoming more known via being very dangerous and notorious just the attention he needed while having the security.

Second Act: The imperfect and inconsistent cutting made it seem like he was in a rush. Which made the police led by LaGuerta try to look for a witness or anything like that. Misdirecting them for a good while.

(Valid Theory) Third Act: Knowing how smart Dexter is by seeing how he was killing criminals who even weren't caught by the whole police departments, he assumed Dexter already thought of the Ice Truck.
Reasoning needed for finding out the ice truck being used by the killer: The killer was an easy solution to how the killer cann dump the bodies and neatly too without anyone seeing or having any trouble carrying them to different open to see places without any mess around whatsoever both times, so he kept the victim cold while moving them which would suggest that it was also an ice vehicle. The best one to use, would be an Ice Truck.
Knowing Dexter will come to said conclusion, he was likely spending a lot of time at night (when Dexter hunts his victims most of the times so him being out in like 3 AM wasn't a coincidence) waiting to see Dexter's car (basic thing to think about if he figured out Dexter killing people and tracking him down why wouldn't he know how his car is). When he did, he even made weird moves like speeding (at least in the books) to make Dexter think of it as even more suspicious than before. Using the head (Which was clearly either by some mechanism dropped specifically from the backside of the truck or was kept near himself to drop out the window for Dexter to see) he was able to get Dexter and police the needed evidence for the killer, in fact, using the Ice Truck.

Public: For public this gave him even more popularity and another horrible murder has been committed

Mind you also: Ice Truck was a misdirection on top, and a way for him to give the information about different coloured nails to the public while misdirecting the fact that he actually has a special room for keeping the bodies cold and draining their blood there, as they were led to a wrong conclusion.

Fourth Act: Leaving the chopped up doll with the head separated.
What this does is making Dexter realise that the Ice Truck Killer actually knows of Dexter's nature, making Dexter feel even more fascinated and connected with him. That also later on is used in the forum's for them to communicate using the cold barbie doll as a way to communicate (didn't think of it before but low-key VCI for both as they made it up just from scratch). This also led Dexter to believe that, if the Ice Truck Killer is giving specifically him such information and informs him of that, that he wants to "play". More-so building Dexter's connection to himself and the mutual understanding of them both.
The Barbie being dismembered and the head being on top of the fridge like the woman's head, also shows us more that Third Act was fully planned and is used for Dexter to understand that as well, which even was (in my logical assumption) the main reason that when looking at it, Dexter realised that it's not war or rivalry, it's "playtime". The doll and the victim found in the Ice Truck also both have the different coloured nails. Which makes it undeniable for Dexter's mind that Ice Truck Killer wants to play and also gives the evidence specifically to him. Which will also be used in further acts.

Fifth Act: Framing Tony Tucci and turning him into a part of his plan.
Firstly he waited until the media would start assuming that Tony was the ice truck killer (Credits to Albano: To make that happen, Brian left the body of that sex worker in the hockey field and naturally they would have checked if there was any recording that could have any evidence, so once they searched and didn't find it they thought that someone took it away most likely of the security, so they came at Tucci's house and found the recording that showed him putting the body in the field (naturally he was threaten by Brian) so he got incriminated. The reason behind all of this is because without that the police wouldn't recognize him planting the pieces of his body as something accomplished by the ice truck killer due he used a different M.O.) and then started leaving cut up body parts of his into different locations. On the same time the next day he left another one and as they found out after more than 1: The cut off body part shows that Tony is alive. This makes the police and Dexter all start investigating and trying to find Tony Tucci before he'll be harmed more or even killed.
He left Tucci for Dexter as a "Gift" showing that he knew Dexter would be the one to find Tucci first as it was a part of his plan, because he left the body parts already in places from Dexter's past pictures, giving him who already was deducing things faster than the police usually even more of a headstart.
So here's how Dexter's choice on killing or saving Tony would go:
1: If Dexter would kill him, he'd know that Dexter just can't help it seeing someone vulnerable and an easy prey.
2: if Dexter didn't, then it would more-so show to him Dexter's morals and he'll be sure that Dexter isn't ready to meet him yet, because he'd likely want to kill Brian and also because isn't "free" like Brian.
This act also will open things for a future Act.

Sixth Act: Getting closer to Dexter on a personal level. Knowing that Dexter's "Sister" will be the one tending to him as she's the most interested and invested in that case + wants to gain position (it's not that hard to see based on her previous actions even without talking to her directly + who wouldn't want to move up the ranks?) so, even when Tony starts going after girls with his playboy nature, "Rudy" immediately displays towards Debra that is attracted to her (despite actually disliking her as she's taking the sibling place instead of him) by saying that they should watch out for him as he's a Dog, and also says that he "Might steal his thunder". This was used to get closer to Dexter by getting closer to his sister. In the end they even got into a relationship together and it'll be used as a foil for further acts.

Seventh Act: Neil Perry.
Neil Perry was arrested as the main suspect of being the Ice Truck Killer via a partial print they found on the Lasagne Wrapper. And as Perry even knew things like how the bodies were preserved with cold temperature, draining blood etc which Media didn't know, the police took a huge bite onto this one and although later it was proven wrong this gave him a lot of needed time for his other acts. For Dexter it also was showing him how lonely he felt without the Ice

Truck Killer with their already established connection in previous acts, which when he returned made Dexter elated.
Why he used Neil: Not sure how, but Brian knew that Neil mutilated the corpse of his mother after she died of a natural cause. He knew that, Neil, also wanted fame and using that, he got him to pretend to be the ice truck killer.
Proof: For once, the coincidence is very unlikely that he'll just randomly find a person who'd take the blame for being the Ice Truck Killer.
Secondly, he even shared information with him like drained blood, cold bodies etc so he can convince the police.
Through all this it's easy to see that it wouldn't make sense for Brian to just trust someone without knowing they'll follow through with the part of his plan, because his plan would get an enormous hit if he got lied to. Brian is too calculative for that, and didn't need to do this unless he knew it's high reward, no risk. Because it was only used to misdirect the police specifically from going after him while also disappointing Dexter and making him feel lonely just to turn that around later. And when Neil had no idea who Dexter was, it made Dexter feel amazing.

Eight Act: The Inheritance.
This is strictly towards Dexter.
Motives: He again, wants Dexter to know that they were related at the end of his plan, and have a reunion as brothers born in blood. Dexter knowing about his real mother from his sealed memories was the most important part of it. The 103's, he was able to get Dexter to find out about the whole situation that happened in the Cargo Container with his mother. Next by giving him that inheritance, Dexter was there first-hand which also gave him some memories, plus, he was able to talk with Dexter on top, more. Anywho, with that Dexter also saw things in that house which also helped him remember more of the past.
As a part of his plan he needed the Inheritance to be valid: And for the inheritance it wasn't seen as a murder because, he was killed by Brian with an injection if diabetic insulin which made it seem like a heart attack. It looking like one was important so it wouldn't be seen as murder with one of main possible motives being the inheritance itself.

Now for evidence of that:
It happened in a small difference of time between the 103's, Neil Perry and this. We saw his motives. He concealed his real identity and even made himself take on one of Rudy Copper even though there would be no need to for his killings, and as his past was normal or else he'd already be hunted it means he wasn't running away but rather was preparing for something. But if he had the Brian Moser name, Dexter would prematurely know that the house belongs to not only his mother but also Brian's. That's the only plausible reason as to why he'd do something as taking someone's identity and living by it. We even see after they left that Rudy went into the house of the neighboring grandmother meaning he was already there before in that identity, but why would he even be there? The answer is simple: To set up this whole situation and she even knew who was there. With that the inheritance wasn't given to him nor "Brian Moser and Dexter Morgan" but just to "Dexter Morgan" why else would inheritance go only to Dexter and not them both?

Logical Reasoning of Brian and Dexter sharing the same biological father: It's not known if Brian is the son of Joe Driscoll or not directly, sadly. But I can logically reason it out. Neither is actually born a psychopath. Psychopaths are usually born. But they are both "Made" Psychopaths by the early childhood trauma. Genetics actually PLAY A HUGE factor in it + as Brian said they are brother's born in blood so it's just an idea of that. Brian nor Dexter actually show anything sociopathic aside from having impulses to kill, but they both can easily make and manage social relationships with normal people and aren't exactly violent or impulsive otherwise nor are either of them reckless. Meaning they are both almost surely Psychopathic instead. And psychopathy is very greatly dependent on genetics. Meaning it's almost certain they have the same father too. Meaning: Brian also made sure he wasn't in that inheritance which only aids his planning capabilities.
More-so, the grandmother easily letting him in shows she's very much familiar with him so he was there before and for a long time.
Basically showing that: Tony Tucci, Getting with Debra, Neil Perry, feeding the "103" number info to Dexter, using diabetic Insulin to cause heart attack of Dexter's father, manipulate the inheritance etc was all used to make this one come to fruition which made them physically reunion even if Dexter didn't know Brian is his brother, they still bonded a lot and Dexter learned about his past before the adoption.

Ninth Act: After feeding Dexter information about his past and making him remember a lot of it, he sent the blood-filled jar to the Miami, and there they found the Hotel number 103 inside of it, with Dexter being the first one to go in as the blood spatter analyst, when going in there, all of the walls have been covered in blood and so was the floor. Because of Dexter remembering some of his life before adoption this triggered his blocked memories of the Cargo Container incident, shaking him up quite a bit and fully recovering his past memories. In the hotel room he planted an alarm-clock which had a ringtone that mentioned the number 103 and book which had a mark on the page 103, leading the police to the conclusion that it could be related to some kind of code in order that Dexter could receive that info and could infer that Brian wanted him to make a cross-check with the number 103 due to his knowledge that he wants to show him his past memories, leading him to find details about the ship-yard massacre and informations about Laura Moser; so then he could kidnap Debra making himself be hunted again in order that the police could investigate his house and Dexter could find the “Born Free” CD that led him to the conclusion that he’s still giving him clues that he must decipher, that one was actually a doll with an apron that said “sweet home” leading him to the conclusion that Brian was trying to bring him back to home (before the Shipyard massacre) so he could use the info about Laura Moser to find her old house for the reunion.
The blood drained from his victims before that was used as he wouldn't be able to just chop up someone there without getting messy himself and someone would see bodies in the bag come out. This was another aim of his from the very beginning and why he was saving the blood he drained despite it being the obvious evidence if it got found out fully incriminating him if that happened so it would be rational to dispose of it but he wanted to use it for this from the very beginning. Which would suggest all of the acts have actually been calculated and planned, showing even better and solid level of planning and a very good anticipation level than without this.

Tenth Act: After he kidnapped Debra, Brian reconnects with his brother, Dexter, who even calls him Biney, showing that Dexter truly remembered their past together. With this, despite so many people he killed, and even almost killing Debra, Dexter truly wanted to set him free and it was very hard for him to kill Brian. If Brian didn't go after his sister, Dexter would likely spare him, a sad small oversight in such a huge and amazing plan, led to his death. But he was satisfied even with that, as now he'll forever be in his brother's heart, and was able to reconnect with the one he wanted to be connected with. As Brothers born in Blood.
