Red John rebunk by Zz9he

This ain't even planned I'm just gonna type out why this dudes wrong, respectfully, if i use all caps its to emphasize it im not yelling.

> So this point of RJ having absolute control over his emotions is complete bullshit, as other characters have maintained secrets from PJ that he couldn't solve by just looking at their faces. Even La Roche, had a severed ear stored in a tiny box, and even with him being worried about the contents inside the box being revealed, his emotional expressions, and the way he talked about it, PJ couldn't figure what was inside the box itself.

Patrick not only didn't give a fuck about what was in the box but also it was a tongue not an ear.

> Plus in the same episode that PJ meets the sheriff again, he is way more sure that he is RJ than any of the others. This mostly relates to the overall EM part, as RJ is described as afraid of heights by PJ's psychiatrist, and the sheriff is also hesitant on climbing up a ladder. Along with this, she also says that he is afraid of birds, with him getting afraid of them after he goes to save Jane from his potential killer at the end of the episode. So in the episode itself he couldn't control himself from showing his phobias, and in theory proved that he can't control all of his emotions to such an absurd point as many actually believe.

Yeah, he can't control all his emotions I agree I don't scale his EM that high but a small correction is that Sophie Miller only mentioned acrophobia not once in her description of Mr. Roth did she even mention ornithophobia.

> 7) 2 thousand handshakes list prediction feat is just a trick (CPI debunk)
>
> People believe that Red John narrowed down PJ's 2 thousand handshakes list way faster than he did by clearing out the unlikely suspects, and thinking of who PJ might suspect, to create the definitive final list, which would require massive amounts of CPI due to the possibilities of a final list from that many people that could be chosen.

I simply haven't seen anyone argue this. It was a planning feat not CPI.

> 8) Bosco was able to compromise Red John in a severe way
>
> Bosco, a detective who was above average in intellect, alongside his team, were able to investigate and gain a piece of information so important to the case that Red John had to send someone to kill him. Bosco is not a noteworthy character, many people don't even put him at top 10 in the series, and he doesn't even have great feats. Yet, he made a discovery that made Red John act in an agressive way, which implies that Red John made a slip up that could have lead to him being captured way faster than expected. If Bosco was a way better detective, and was more cautious of the fact that RJ could send someone to kill him, then the Red John case wouldn't be held up in such high regards as one of the hardest in the SCD community.

Yeah cool and RJ simply killed him. Him being cautious wouldn't have done much Kristina was in a home under complete police supervision and she still got kidnapped. There's also the fact that RJ basically has an army of goons within the CBI. The mistake that he made wasn't even a recent one it was one made very early on in his killing career when he lacked experience. In fact by the time he killed Bosco Rebecca already got rid of the evidence related to Carter Peak. Let's talk about what this mistake even was. It was Carter Peak a man he had killed out of self preservation which breaks his usual pattern. You even mention that Bosco has above average intelligence which even though i won't say he's a supergenius it's not like he got the evidence through his mind. He stumbled upon it because Carter Peaks body was discovered while renovating a building.

9) Patrick struggles with people who should realistically be of no issue for him to handle

Patrick can no diff people that are quite smart, but he struggles against people that he would normally low diff, like Erika Flyyn, or the SJK killer. He wasn't sure if he could see through Erika, and he needed to trigger Red John to stop the SJK killer. Patrick using Red John to kill said killer was implied to be a last resort, as PJ simply couldn't prove the identity of the SJK killer normally, even being outsmarted by him during the episode. Erika also outsmarts Patrick during her episode, showing a detail in the room that they were in that invalidated PJ's initial reasoning. These people, absolute fodders, who get taken out in one episode, have outsmarted him at least once. This proves that the closer someone comes to give him a bit of a challenge, this challenge proves to skyrocket in difficulty for PJ, for some reason.

So even if Red John wasn't that smart, and was to say, two or three times as smart as these people, the challenge that he would give to Patrick would be much higher than expected, as Jane seems to struggle in taking out people that are actually smart, and not just your killer of the week type character. So his difficulty in catching Red John might be an exaggerated difficulty due to his problem of facing people anywhere near his level. Something specific to him, and not to most people.

Yeah those people like SJK and Erica Flynn (with a c and two n's btw) still got caught within an episode it literally just means they were above average criminals and the difficulty of the RJ case doesn't even stem from the fact PJ is investigating it.

> 10) PJ is nerfed due to plot induced stupidity (inconsistecy of Patrick Jane's portrayal and feats) + Red John had plot armour
>
> PJ is inconsistently written throughout the 6 seasons were he faces Red John. In one episode he can analyze 12 monitors at the same time, but in another he fails to notice Red John's rope trick. Sometimes his abilities are almost unrealistic, like actual mind reading, in other situations he can deduce a crime while suffering from ilusions, and he can even cold read people in seconds while as a young man. But then, he has difficulty to notice certain people's intentions, he makes careless mistakes when going against Red John, and the level of his reasoning fluctuates from one occasion to the other.
>
> Plus, Red John couldn't have been caught by Patrick even if the writers were to actually make him consistently as smart as he could possibly be, because in the earlier seasons they didn't even know who Red John was supposed to be. So one of the reasons Patrick couldn't figure it out way earlier, was because the character itself didn't have an identity at all in the earlier seasons. But when you get to season 5 and season 6, you can see that RJ gets more information about his identity revealed, Patrick can trace his true self more easily and the clues are easier to discover.

While i wont argue he gets nerfed occasionally for plot they were 14 monitors. The rope trick wasn't exactly easy to spot because in PJs you see an assassin enter a room and DELIBERATELY WAIT and at this point you didn't realize your whole plot was already unraveled. The rope could have been used to merely subdue Madeleine there is no reason why he should assume the assassin was going to climb down yet he was still skeptical.

> Plus, Red John couldn't have been caught by Patrick even if the writers were to actually make him consistently as smart as he could possibly be, because in the earlier seasons they didn't even know who Red John was supposed to be. So one of the reasons Patrick couldn't figure it out way earlier, was because the character itself didn't have an identity at all in the earlier seasons. But when you get to season 5 and season 6, you can see that RJ gets more information about his identity revealed, Patrick can trace his true self more easily and the clues are easier to discover.
>
> In a way, Red John was helped by a plot that didn't decide who he was, needing to stretch out his arc until they came up with a potential killer. With PJ mostly not looking out for people related to him that could become Red John victims, not deducing the rope tactic that he should have deduced faster than was shown, his observation failing to notice that the fake RJ carried a weapon inside a newspaper, not being able to see through a Blake Association member intention of hurting him in the end of season 1. It is odd, but since Red John is a main part of the show, prolonging this battle of wits for many seasons could have much to do with nerfing PJ, so that Red John seems harder to fight against.

Valid points here but it still doesn't make RJ any dumber for it as he still holds very high quality feats. In S5 and S6 though it was a part of RJs plan (further down) also is PJs observation supposed to see through the fucking newspaper. Even if he could what is he supposed to do with that information? Yell out that he has a gun? PJ also had a gun his intention was to clearly kill RJ. Also Jane very clearly saw through Hardy in S1.

> 4) During his appearance in season 2 where Patrick is restrained, you could probably calculate his height, as well as in other situations like how he paints his smiley face with the height of his arms to find a proportion between his arms and his whole body, and with all of this you could come to the conclusion that he is 6 feet tall, or 183 centimeters, since Red John's actor is 6 feet tall, having that exact height.
>
> With this, I searched on the internet for data in California about how many police members there are in the states, as well as their gender, their height and their age, and while I couldn't get all of the data from 2008, it still should be close to how the numbers would have been in that time. And this is what I was able to get in my investigation:

You can't find his height based on either of those two things. He was hunched over in S2 and it was dark. From PJs perspective he can't learn much and the smiley faces he paints on the wall are inconsistent. In some places it's way above PJ in some places it's at his height.

> 1) He is at least 43 years old (as in the red barn episode they find a barn with the Red John smiley face in it from 1988, 25 years ago from 2013. Assuming that he was probably 18 years old, as he should have been able to kill people by that time, and would need to be quite grown up to do so, we can estimate that he is at least 43 years old), and probably less than 70 years old, as if he was that old he probably wouldn't be able to kill grown men, women and escape from scenes as fast as he does. So his age range is between 40+ to 60+ years old.
>
> 2) He is a man (quite obvious)
>
> 3) He is linked to the police, and is probably a police officer

He leaked those things intentionally. Once you look at the suspect list law enforcement doesn't help much as Ray Haffner, McAllister himself, Reede Smith, Gale Bertram, and Bret Partridge, Robert Kirkland ALL work in law enforcement the only one who DOESNT is Bret Stiles who is a cult leader who has many officers in his pocket anyways. Leaking the other things was legit to provoke Jane to make the list once PJ is given the trigger by Lorelei. This doesn't really help catch RJ does it. Also for age Elliston farm was revealed in season five AFTER Jane already started on the list

> But with the height chart, we can see that men with 6 feet of height only take 13% of space in the graph. If we take this and apply to California having a similar ratio in height between all men, then the 15k suspects are now reduced to only 1 thousand and 950 suspects. For reference, this number is a bit lower than PJ's handshake list, and this is just based on 4 simple details.

Bro this is not shorter than PJs list PJ literally narrowed it down to seven after applying some of the SAME TRAITS and before the list wasn't even all too much bigger.

So with simple calculations, you can get a list of people similar to PJ, without huge amounts of clues. With the handshake list and Red John's characteristics details, instead of a final list of 7 being created that took much time to be created, you would already know who Red John in a much faster way, if you linked it with all the previous information.

“Huge amount of clues” only like five of which went into actually making the list.

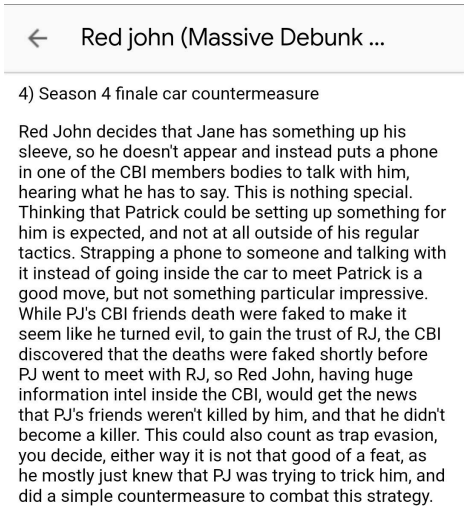

Next is the trap evasion section yeaahhh I don't even scale him high in this so no problems here.

For season 6, the trap evasion near PJ's house is also explained, as two of the people that got called by PJ are from the Blake Association as well. Again, one of them is Bertram, which would make the analysis on the season 3 trap evasion debunk even more concrete, as he helps Red John in this one as well. He and another guy get invited by PJ to a place near his home, and so does Red John. Now, if you are in Red John's place, it doesn't take even an above avarage human to notice that this is a trap. Think of it, Red John knows Patrick's list, and these three characters are specifically Red John suspects, so if PJ wanted to gather all of them in one place, RJ would have no problem getting a flash grenade and faking his death in anticipation. Predicting that he would want to solve the case at that very moment is not hard, and imagining that he could kill the three of them at that point is not that difficult as well. So evading this trap is not that hard, as the signs are clear as day.

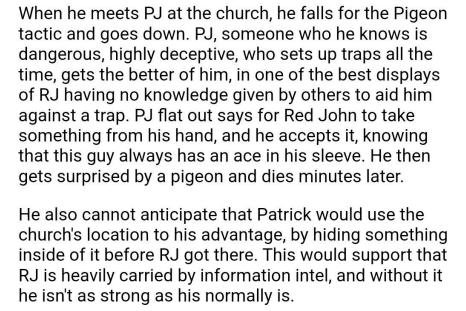

3) Red John makes himself more suspcious by getting near Bertram and Smith

In season 6, inside of the CBI, Red John meets with Bertram and Smith, two other people that are Red John suspects, in broad daylight. Even in season 3, a person could have deduced that Bertram was a Blake Association agent, because of how the trap was evaded. This would reinforce the idea that between one of these three, one of them was RJ, even before the trap set later on in the season that revealed that they had 3 dots marked in their skin, which was a symbol linked to the Blake Association. From this alone, Jane could lower his list of 7 suspects to only 3 suspects. He doesn't seem to bother that he is making himself to be a bigger target in Jane's eyes, exposing himself in public in a way that would make him more guilty.

This isnt even debunking anything this wasn't a trap evasion thing it was his plan.

I don't even know anyone who holds this feat highly so again idk who you're fighting on this.

This is all a part of PJs strategy. Read this doc https://docs.google.com/document/d/1B6sVaag8rV7sxltDanM1dc4kFFGgn-WWLpfFhYJtbU8/edit?usp=drivesdk
It's not too big of an antifeat for RJ to fall for it given the strategy is basically tailored perfectly to Red John's mind.

We're nearing the end so let me give the simplified explanation of the strategy for all those instances that I just said “part of his strategy”

So basically he planned PJs creation of the suspect list by deliberately leaking certain information and then having Lorelei trigger it. After Jane narrows it down to 7 he kills Brett narrowing it down and then kills Kira Tinsley deliberately leaking the tattoo. This was so that Jane, who had already gotten so close, would trigger a meeting thinking that only one person would have the tattoo at which point he bombs the building twice once to knock them out and the other one to use a surrogate body he prepared to fake his death. Once he faked his death only 2 Blake association members remain Reede and Bertram. Reede gets hunted down by the BA which forces him to turn his in PJ would obviously realize he isn't him and bam only one dude left called Bertram. PJ sees through this with his crazy foresight and just kills his ass but it's not that bad of an antifeat.