Due to JJL and his fellow comrades poor attempt at debunking the Prison Game arc. This document aims to debunk their so called debunk which apparently debunks prison game down to its foundations 🥶

Before we get started, a clarification between a debunk and a hypothetical must be established: a debunk despite seeming broad and intuitive is often misunderstood. A debunk is an argument that aims to undermine the validity of a particular claim in a verse using already established propositions. Which is to elucidate that the implementation of a hypothetical “X doing Y would have resulted in X’s victory against S therefore X not being good at z category” is fundamentally flawed as for any proposition P, not P would exist which would be outside the established narrative of a particular character or verse (insofar as not P isn’t actually present or elucidated in the verse, that would then result in the feat getting contradicted and thereby debunked)

With this established let’s move onto the claims.

1.Dazai not using his major wins-con

This passage shows the lack of comprehension present amidst the makers of the document.

The premise of the argument relies on Dazai’s involvement of Chuuya being a terrible move due to Fyodor acquiring an escape route during Dazai’s plan to drown Fyodor in ch 101.

This argument presupposes that Fyodor hadn’t seen through Dazai’s trap before he enacted it.

A necessary presupposition as if Fyodor had seen through it then the entire trap could be avoided by Fyodor all together if it was threatening to him

And further presupposes Dazai’s goal: That being Fyodor’s death during the trial.

With those necessary conditions elucidated, let’s promptly debunk them.

1. During the Elevator trap by Fyodor, Dazai reveals that Fyodor had already seen through Dazai’s trap due to him knocking out the prison guards, of which, one of them would have been a vampire. Which sigma further backs up by saying even before Dazai taken control of the command center, Fyodor had already controlled

Meurrsalt.

IT'S TRUE THAT YOU COULD ESCAPE USING THAT METHOD...
BUT IT'S UNTHINKABLE UNLESS YOU KNEW THAT THERE WOULD BE A FLOOD!
IMPOSSIBLE!
RIDICULOUS!
ONCE CONTACT FROM THEM CEASED, HE WAS ABLE TO DEDUCE THE OVERTAKING OF THE COMMAND CENTER.
HE PROBABLY HAD ONE OF THE GUARDS ASSIMILATED DAYS BEFORE...
WHAT?
IT'S THE VAMPIRES.
BUT I AM VERY WEAK, AND TO CATCH A COLD WOULD BE INTOLERABLE TO ME.
SO IN EXCHANGE
HAVING THAT SAID... IT IS TRUE THAT WE WERE PLACED IN GREAT DANGER.
THE TRIAL OF THE FLOODING WAS ONE FIT FOR A SUBORDINATE OF GOD, LIKE MYSELF.
THEN
EVEN BEFORE DAZAI HAD TAKEN DOWN THE COMMAND CENTER
DOSTOEVSKY HAD ALREADY CONTROLLED MEURSAULT ...?

2. Fyodor's death being Dazai's goal during the trial of flooding is inherently flawed as in ch 112, Dazai reveals his real goal being the hand injury and NOT the flooding itself.

Further the application of an hypothetical near the end of this debunk has already been talked about prior but essentially, the reason the end conclusion "Fyodor's plan not being good" fails is for the following reasons:

1-Fyodor having already seen through the trap before Dazai even enacted it (1.)

2-The implementation of a hypothetical that outright goes against what has already been established by the narrative -> Fyodor acting the same despite seeing through it even before Dazai changed the password.

With the arguments addressed and successfully debunked, let's move onto claim 2.

2.Dazai not utilizing timestop effectively

The premise of the argument relies on Dazai using the time stop ability prior to the affirmation of his bet with Fyodor and the injection of the lethal poison to kill Fyodor and Nikolai right then and there.

This argument seems comical to say the least given the sole reason of Dazai's cautious nature in Prison game being due to the mysterious nature of Fyodor's ability and attempting to kill him via direct contact seems quite absurd. This point will get further exposition in "3."

3.Dazai not killing Fyodor himself

I wouldn't bother making any sort of comment here and just present the debunk.

The premise of the argument relies on Dazai killing Fyodor with a gun as he was impaled, killing him definitely.

This argument presupposes some following arguments due to the virtue of it's conclusion. Them being:

1: Dazai thinking that Fyodor has a plan even after his death -> Virtue of him believing that Fyodor has been cornered with him literally bleeding further precaution, entails a necessity for him to be skeptical about Fyodor's current predicament (His bleeding state)

2:Dazai being dismissive about Fyodor's ability and not thinking much of it. Self explanatory.

With this establishment , let's begin dismantling the argument.

For 1, Dazai up to the recent chapter didn't anticipate or even predict the true nature regarding Fyodor's true ability and only figured out it's nature when it was too late (So far) with Fyodor's intricate deception using blood bullets which activated upon touch being established to Dazai so far, the nullification of his ability's condition with Fyodor being impaled and his "supposed ability" being of no use, Further precaution is an argument stemming from hindsight and is a classic example of X doing Y instead of Not Y, in canon, to win against Z is an argument that doesn't dismiss the facts the narrative has already established. And as described earlier, doesn't debunk anything.

2: The nature of Fyodor’s ability up to that point was extremely vague, Dazai was working with a hypothesis that being ->Fyodor’s ability’s activation condition is touch-> it kills upon touch.

IN ORDER TO MASK HIS ABILITY?
IT'S POSSIBLE THE ABILITY HE SHOWED OFF AT THE END OF THE "MUTUAL DESTRUCTION" INCIDENT WAS A FAKE.
HE LIKELY PREPARED ONE OF HAWTHORNE'S BLOOD BULLETS BEFOREHAND...
...THEN TRANSFERRED THE BLOOD TO THE SOLDIER HE TOUCHED, DESTROYING HIM FROM THE INSIDE.
HOWEVER...
...THAT JUST MADE US CAUTIOUS OF THE POSSIBILITY OF HIS ABILITY'S ACTIVATION CONDITION BEING "TOUCH."
THAT'S EXACTLY WHY MY PLAN WAS ALL DISTANCED.
HENCE, TAKING OUT THE HELICOPTER. ALL IN ORDER TO DEFEAT HIM WITHOUT MAKING DIRECT CONTACT.
IF THAT'S NOT THE CASE...
...WHAT'S THE REAL ACTIVATION CONDITION?

Now, as the phenomenon of similar abilities acting upon each other has already been established in the prior chapters and particularly in v8 of the LNs, The aftermath of Dazai's ability and Fyodor's ability acting upon each other simultaneously would yield an outcome that would be extremely tough to account and for and the conclusion would be extremely tough to predict. Resulting in either a singularity, due to the conflicting nature of Dazai's ability trying to cancel out Fyodor's "supposed ability" which would be trying to kill Dazai simultaneously or an outcome that would be unforeseeable by him. Which is why, in the scan, Dazai elucidates why he wanted to be cautious and take Fyodor out indirectly. Not to mention, in s2 or the guild arc, A person(Lovecraft) who seemed to be an ability user was clearly unaffected by Dazai's ability, further stands to reason for Dazai's skeptical and indirect removal of Fyodor as a threat.

With the 3rd claim subsequently debunked, let's move onto the 4th claim.

4.Chuuya not shooting Fyodor.

The premise of this argument revolves around Chuuya supposedly shooting Fyodor due to Fyodor seeing through Chuuya's deception being more likely than Chuuya being successful in killing Fyodor.

I wouldn't bother addressing the criticism with our current knowledge of Fyodor's ability and rather would debunk it via the utilisation of facts that the narrative had already established up to that point.

I won't bother dealing with the Dazai win con arguments as those have already been addressed prior.

You state that: "The point is- the chance of Fyodor seeing through Chuuya's prolonged acting skills is far higher than the chance of Fyodor's ability allowing him to kill Chuuya if Chuuya tries to shoot him. The former carries more risk not only towards the plan, but towards Chuuya's life too."

Not only do you claim that the former carries more risk towards the plan and towards Chuuya's life for some reason, you also dismiss the entire precautionary stance that Dazai adopted due to the very reason that you mentioned, regarding Chuuya's life. Attempting to catch Fyodor off-guard while being disguised as a vampire even if momentarily and sneaking a gun around him and attempting to shoot him before he can close the distance between Chuuya and touch him is unironically more difficult and unlikely to occur than Chuuya simply deceiving Fyodor by merely enacting his commands.

And funnily enough , this argument seemingly disregards the concern and safety for Chuuya's life which it preached being a demerit of Dazai's original plan earlier 🤣

5. Dazai not sticking around with Fyodor

We reach the final claim and this claim is the most comical claim so far. The argument suggests that Dazai should have stuck around with Fyodor and have Chuuya shoot Fyodor…

Not only does the argument completely dismiss Dazai's precautionary stance due to Fyodor's ability, it also makes Dazai's entire plan inapplicable.

This argument aims to procure another hypothetical to debunk what happened inverse and demerit its brilliance but this is just comical. The argument ignores the fact that Dazai and Fyodor were trying to escape the prison and get the antidote and not die. Dazai sticking around with Fyodor only increases Fyodor's chances of winning due to him already possessing the keycard and him waiting and not moving being a matter of convenience rather than necessity. If the argument assumes Fyodor's actions to remain the same despite Dazai's actions changing then the burden relies on the opposer to present evidence that alludes towards the same conclusion. Furthermore, Dazai waiting around Fyodor who is aware about Chuuya would only serve to arouse suspicion if anything. Seemingly nullifying Dazai's plan or rather making it unusable before Chuuya even enacts it.

W JJL 🥂You truly debunked Prison Game down to it's foundations.
