“The Greatest Detective”

Warning: This character is unrealistic, therefore a large part of his feats lack much internal logic, even so, I adore the character and will strive to collect his feats. Furthermore, this document only contains the feats from the manga, meaning that it does not include Dead Apple or the story of the agency's founding. You should also know that the BSD manga is still ongoing, so this document may be updated in the future.

Chapter 6

Ranpo's motto is "If I'm okay, everything is okay," which demonstrates great self-confidence and self-assurance.
EQ: Emotional Realization

Ranpo deduced that Officer Sugimoto was the culprit because he said, "Shooting a body two more times to camouflage it," which made him the guilty party. He deduced that it happened the day before because the body wasn't badly decomposed, and that it was in the morning because the victim was in casual clothes and without makeup. The day before had been a workday, and it made sense that she would be in casual clothes if she was a worker and worked overtime. He then deduced that he threatened her with the gun because they were a couple, which he deduced because they wore matching watches and she agreed to see him without dressing up much and in casual clothes. Then, using the reconstruction of the date and assuming that he would have gone to the nearest point on the river to dump her, he deduced that it must have been at the abandoned shipyard upstream.

Chapter 10

Atsushi was kidnapped by the mafia, so Ranpo deduces his location using two photographs. Because the wheels were old and undamaged, he was able to conclude that he was incapable of traveling over mountainous terrain. Since they had no escort vehicles, their priority must have been stealth. They were traveling at high speed, meaning they were heading to a desolate and remote place. Then, somehow, he jumps to the conclusion that Atsushi is alive on a ship at sea at a speed of about 20 knots.

Chapter 22

Chuuya, from the Port Mafia, was at the entrance, telling them to leave. By this time, certain members of the Agency had opted for an isolation strategy due to the three-organization war, and they saw Chuuya through the cameras. Ranpo approached Director Fukuzawa, who asked if everyone agreed. Ranpo knew instantly that he meant accepting what Chuuya said and sending two of them outside.
EQ: Emotional Perception, Emotional Understanding

Chuuya offered them the location of two members of the guild, one of the enemy organizations. Fukuzawa saw through the Port Mafia's strategy, realizing they were feeding them false information, and that they had given that information to the guild to force a conflict. Then Ranpo spoke to Chuuya, asking if he had been the one who gave the information to the guild. This was because Ranpo understood that the guild had also seen through the trap, but decided to go anyway because it was too attractive a bait to resist. So if Chuuya was the one who gave the information, he must know it. Chuuya replied saying that he was using the ADA employees as bait, but that the guild didn't know that the ADA was mobilizing and they still had time. Fukuzawa asked Ranpo if Chuuya was lying, to which Ranpo replied no.

Chapter 32

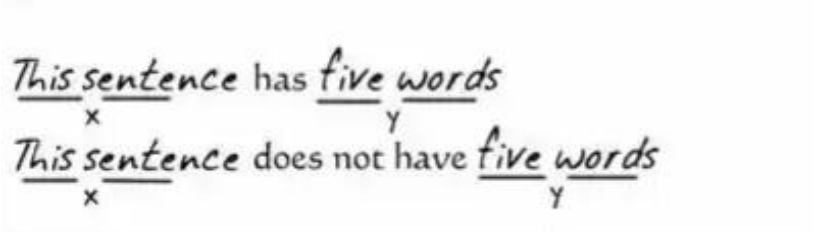

After being challenged by a letter, Ranpo and Yosano go there. Before entering, Ranpo predicts that it's not a trap.

Foresight: Prediction

The following riddle was on the front door:

Of course, Ranpo solved it easily.

FSIQ: VCI
Thinking: Lateral Thinking, Pattern Recognition

And then he went inside. There was Poe, his future rival, who handed him a book. This was the riddle: Ranpo had to find the culprit. However, upon entering, he lost his glasses. Due to his previous conditioning, he assumed he wouldn't be able to solve the case. Thus, based on Poe's words that this was a serial murder, Ranpo deduced that the killer would continue until he had killed them all. He also recognized the locked room as a typical scenario in detective novels.

Thinking: Pattern Recognition
Reasoning: (Really basic) Deductive and Abductive Reasoning

The case continued, and someone suggested that a fishing line had been used, passing it under the door and through the pocket to return it to its place. Ranpo quickly refuted this, saying that the space under the door is smaller than the key, and besides, the key was in the victim's back pocket, which was facing upwards, so the key couldn't fit. The person suggested another possibility, that the culprit was outside holding onto the metal bars of the window, and had returned using tools. Ranpo refuted this again, saying that there was a storm outside and there wasn't a single trace of water on the window.
Thinking: Critical Thinking, Analytical Thinking
Reasoning: Deductive Reasoning

After Yosano's death, he resolves to solve the case, restructuring his worldview to use Yosano's glasses as a trigger, dissolving the lie he told himself that his ability only activated with certain glasses, and realizing it could be activated with other glasses, reaching a higher level of emotional fulfillment than he had previously experienced.
EQ: Emotional Realization, Emotional Engagement

Now for one of the most deranged and absurd deductions ever (and I mean truly absurd, it makes absolutely no sense). The culprit had no reason to create a sealed room, but this didn't make sense since there were no suspects at the time. Then, observing that the culprit's gloves pointed to the crack beneath the brick wall, he deduced that the perpetrator and the culprit were accomplices, and the culprit disappeared when Ranpo entered, replacing the protagonist of the story. The second murder is then solved because Ranpo realized that the place was an entertainment center in an orbital elevator in the year 2050 (¡¿WTF?!). He knew this because the people wore clothes provided by the mansion instead of their own, and the medical equipment was rudimentary. Therefore, the axe that killed Yosano would have moved on its own due to the use of magnetic fields to attract metal.
Thinking: Analytical Thinking, Divergent Thinking, Lateral Thinking
Reasoning: Abductive Reasoning

Narratives suggest he's on a higher level than Poe because he beat him in another mystery in the past, but this is more of a buff for Poe than for Ranpo.

Chapter 33

Ranpo and Dazai were planning their counterattack for the guild. Dazai suggested infiltrating the guild base and planting a bomb, but Ranpo said it wouldn't work, and it would probably go badly if the attack depended on telecommunications. Then Dazai suggested entrusting it to Kenji after the special department raided the place, but Ranpo said that if they carried it out on the ground, the battle would be prolonged and everyone would suffer more than necessary.

Chapter 39

Just by seeing a photograph of a deceased person (later revealed to be the director of the orphanage where Atsushi lived), Ranpo deduced that he was going to the flower shop. The clues and information he used aren't mentioned, but it's reasonable to assume there was some Abductive Reasoning combined with Emotional Understanding.
[Narrative]

Chapter 45

Poe gives Ranpo a game. This game was actually a murder case where the doctor had murdered his colleague, but Ranpo quickly realized that the doctor wasn't the killer; it was the president. Recordings had replaced Ranpo's face with the doctor's using a system. The thought process isn't explained, but it can be assumed that he used some kind of Abductive or Deductive Reasoning.
[Narrative]

Chapter 47-47.5

Fyodor instigated a war between the Port Mafia and the ADA, where only one of their leaders could survive if the other was killed. Because both were victims of a special ability, they were surrounded by the mafia. Ranpo devised a plan: to find the ability user and nullify it using Dazai. He used Tanzaki, who possesses the ability to create illusions, to pretend they were there and share his deductions with them. Meanwhile, Kenji broke through the wall and they extracted Fukuzawa so they could escape. His deductions were that since Dazai said Fyodor called the ability user "a certain criminal," it meant he couldn't leave Yokohama, as the only public escape route was the Special Abilities Division. Therefore, he had to remain there.

Chuuya and trap him in the book, then he proceeded to intercept Chuuya and provoke him, and then trap him in the book, for which he had to react quickly.

Ranpo entered the prison to tell Kunikida that he would prove his innocence after a girl exploded in front of him, erasing the evidence. Kunikida said, "I..." to which Ranpo predicted he would finish the sentence by saying, "I feel guilty, so I accept the charges." He then said he was committed to the objective and wouldn't let either the agency or the director get in his way, claiming that there should be an expert in cleaning evidence from the rats (Fyodor's organization), Ranpo noticed that Poe was reading a book, trying to deduce the culprit. The author had been murdered before publishing the last volume. Somehow, Ranpo deduced the culprit from the book after only seeing a few pages. We can assume he used VCI, CPI, Thinking and Reasoning. Narratively, we know that all the readers were trying to solve the mystery, so Ranpo outperformed them all in the aforementioned categories in just a few seconds.

[Narrative]

Ranpo also predicted that the culprit would sell the manuscript the next day. Because the criminal had two motives, resentment and money, he overheard the contents of the fourth chapter before it was finished, so he must have been close to the victim. He killed her after finishing the manuscript because that was what he was waiting for. With the world in turmoil over the murder, the manuscript's value would rise, and he could sell it. He was trying to sell it specifically to Poe, since Poe had brought Karl (his raccoon). In a crowded place, Karl would be uncomfortable, so the reason he brought him was so that whoever he met would recognize him by that, a theory reinforced by Poe's mention of an auction.

Poe told Ranpo that the person he was meeting was carrying a red envelope. Ranpo automatically detected the red envelope, which led them to some arrows on the window. Looking through it, they saw a body fall. Ranpo processed the fall in real time, it was the cleaner's. They then headed to the location. The police arrived, so Ranpo deduced that the culprit had called them earlier, based on the distance and the location of the victim's shoe. They had seen it during the fall, and the shoe was worn, the victim wore it regularly, so it fit well. However, it didn't match the footprints Ranpo had already seen on the mine floor. The body had been wearing a mask during the fall, which was attached to a rope. The culprit had grabbed it from above, and it detached from the body as it fell. The culprit had already disfigured the face, the fall was to provide an excuse for the facial damage. All of this was deduced without using his glasses.

Ranpo's ultradeduction deduction failed, so he was forced to find another tactic. He pretended to give up and return to his office, but in reality, he continued working on the case. He knew Poe was there because of the manuscript in the red envelope.

That envelope led them to witness the downfall of the false culprit, the way Ranpo had been indirectly manipulated by the culprit to create a false case. Therefore, the cleaner and the culprit in the author's murder must be the same person.

Now knowing this, Ranpo decided to read the novel and noticed that the last page was a photocopy, as it had water stains, indicating it had been hastily made by the culprit. So Ranpo searched for the original to confirm his hypothesis and found it in a gift shop. The culprit was still nearby, which led him to Mushitaro (who was indeed the culprit).

Then he approached Mushitaro, his goal being to corner him and guide him to the detective agency, so he prepared the police beforehand by having them go to the agency as well, to set an ambush for Mushitaro once he had obtained the evidence, But first he had to make sure it was Mushitaro, so he called Poe and with this relayed the entire conversation with Mushitaro.

And asked if he knew where the taxi stand was, telling him the street was blocked so he'd have to find another one. When Mushitaro refused, Ranpo kept pressing him, saying he would stay put. Mushitaro feigned friendliness and was about to draw him a map. Ranpo excused himself, saying walking was annoying, forcing Mushitaro to change tactics. He was going to point out where to catch buses, but Ranpo said he didn't even know how to take a train (which wasn't a lie). Then he suggested Mushitaro carry him on his back, thus stalling until Mushitaro's transport arrived. Ranpo then slipped into the car, by which time Mushitaro had made himself quite obvious.

Once inside, he asked the driver to take them to the detective agency, thus attracting Mushitaro's attention and using the opportunity to return. He then pressured Mushitaro by telling him details of the case, and finally, he told him his deduction that the culprit was a skill user. He continued to pressure him by saying that he had already solved the case and showed him the manuscript, explaining his deductions. Then he asked him his name, and it became clear to him: Oguri Mushitaro was the culprit.

When the driver threatened him with a gun, Ranpo managed to remain perfectly calm and even insulted him.

However, the plan failed because the driver was a Russian diplomat, and the gun wasn't loaded. Therefore, it was outside their jurisdiction, and the police couldn't do anything. But Ranpo had already prepared a contingency in case that failed. He left his phone there with a text message from Poe, recreating the entire scene Ranpo had visualized. Due to Poe's ability, Mushitaro ended up inside the text, recreating the words Mushitaro said there: "You're wrong, Yonomizo." Of course, Mushitaro could leave whenever he wanted, since he already knew the mystery, but Ranpo convinced him to surrender by telling him his deductions. Because of how important the relationship between the criminal and the victim was, Ranpo deduced that the motive would be resentment. But it's self-destructive to postpone escape after a murder, and according to Ranpo, there are only two things that lead a person to self-destruction; Madness and obligation, then, all of Mushitaro's behavior is identified by Ranpo as clichéd. He was following a script. Mushitaro keeps trying to feign evil, saying he took the opportunity to kill someone he hated and still benefit. The ink is professional-grade, quick-drying ink, and after the murder, it would have been rational to protect the manuscript. Therefore, the water stain could only have been made during or shortly after the murder. Ranpo concluded that the water was Mushitaro's tears. He couldn't allow the tears to be analyzed, so he switched the copy. Then, Ranpo predicted that if even a little information leaked, the public's desire to solve the mystery would diminish, and Mushitaro's friend's last wish would not be fulfilled. He then threatened Mushitaro with revealing the information. Finally, out of empathy for Mushitaro, who never committed murder willingly, he gave him a card inviting him to join the Secret Abilities Service.

The case the agency received led them to a recording of Nikolai telling them he had kidnapped the officers and put them in a machine that would cut them in half. Kunikida sent the information to Ranpo, who immediately discerned that the phrase "only the agency can intervene" implied it was a trap.
Others: Discerning Strategy

In his investigation into the agency's potential downfall, Ranpo found the leader of the secret service, who revealed vital information, such as the fact that an ability user of the “Decay Of Angels" could exchange desired information with that of an enemy, and that the target of this ability was "The Book" An artifact capable of altering reality while maintaining narrative coherence, and that a page had been torn out.
Others: Information Gathering

With this information, Ranpo deduced (without any basis) that the phrase "Lack of pleasure on their celestial throne" refers to those who don't want to return to their seats, and that therefore the "Decay Of Angels" was planning to frame the agency.

This chapter is a flashback to Yosano's backstory. In the past, Fukuzawa and Mori, challenged each other to a duel. Yosano was brought there to heal Mori using her ability. Ranpo predicted that Yosano would come. He somehow learned that she had lost a butterfly brooch during the war, went to the base, and found it. He would use this as a tactic to convince her to come to the agency. Later, during the duel, Ranpo took Yosano away, taking advantage of Mori's distraction. Once she began rambling about how depressing her life was, Ranpo interrupted her, pointing out that it was nonsense, since he would solve every case and therefore wouldn't need to use his ability so often. He then gave her the brooch to convince her to come to the agency, telling her that they wanted her for her kindness, not her ability.

So, he devised a plan to rescue all the agency members. First, Kunikida: for him, he stole the weapon Kamui was going to use to kill him and had Poe shoot the lock. Then, he dispersed sleeping gas and used a gas mask to enter and rescue him.
Next, Yosano: for him, he went to the vehicle beforehand and replaced the engine with a silent electric one (yes, that's very unrealistic) and placed a recording of the engine's sound inside. Then, since the attacker planned to blow up the vehicle with a landmine, Ranpo triggered it beforehand, predicting that this would draw the guards out. He hid there beforehand using a mirror, and when the moment came, he took the vehicle and deactivated the recording so he could leave silently.

And finally, Katai: he threw a phone through the window, predicting that he would immediately catch it. The phone contained a text from Poe, which took him into the story.

Ranpo used his "ultra-deduction" to uncover Kamui. First, he determined that he could not use the evidence of the reality altered by the page. His first clue was what Ango said about the hostage incident, pointing out that the decline of the angels must be linked to some government agency. Then he remembered that the futsumashi kyuu shou (arrow symbolizing an act of heroism) was given to the agency to replace the connection of the angels' decay with a connection to the agency. Furthermore, obtaining classified information, such as Gogol becoming secretary, and the fact that Kamui hid his face even from Sigma, meant he had to be a well-known figure, someone who profited greatly from terrorist attacks and used figures like Fyodor or Nikolai. Therefore, he must have been a strong leader. He implanted his crimes within the agency because he had a strong connection to it. Putting all this together, the culprit had to be Fukuchi. And since Fukuzawa had told him that he had found his life's path, Ranpo deduced that his life's path was the motive.
