*Domino's debunk:

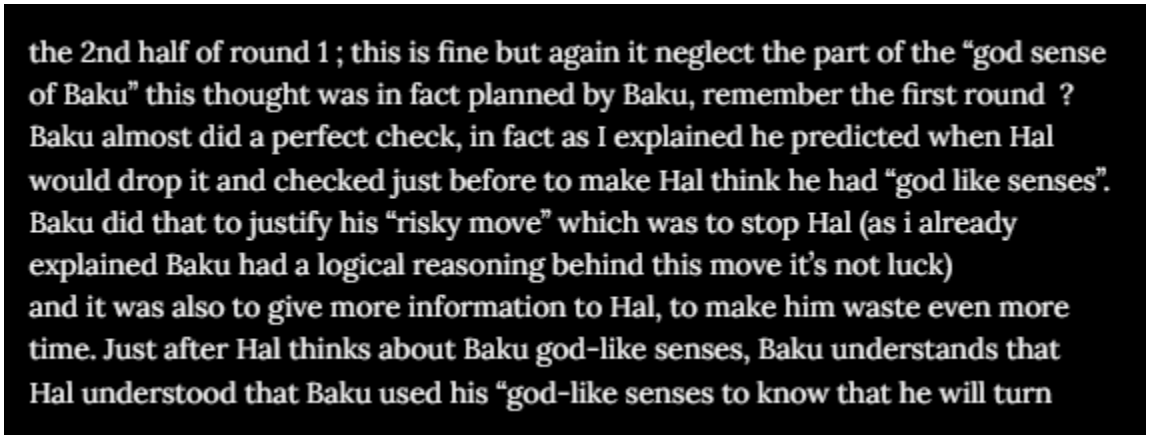

*Answer:
My doc explains that Hal is aware that Baku knows what his thinking process will be, he expects Baku to do a risky check, but begins to doubt himself as the time goes on.
Think about it, Baku'd prefer if Hal wasn't aware of his risk-taking attitude. With this there would be a chance that Hal drops the handkerchief early trying to accumulate Baku's drug, expecting him to use a Safe Strategy.
However, Hal expects that Baku will take the risk and will want to check in a way which isn't a Safe Strategy.

Here is clarification:
Baku is aware that Hal thinks: "Baku wants to do a check, he won't use a Safe Strategy"
Hal is aware that Baku thinks: "Hal won't drop the handkerchief early"
1. Baku wasn't aware of the exact time Hal will drop the handkerchief (if he was he would turn a few seconds later)
2. Hal wasn't aware of the exact time Baku would turn around as he began to doubt his check and wanted to accumulate at least some drug. If Baku turned around a few seconds later then his check would be successful as by that time Hal would've already dropped the handkerchief.

With this Baku turned around at around 30 seconds, in case Hal dropped the handkerchief early, the ST would be very low. On the other hand if Hal didn't drop the handkerchief then Baku would be able to time his death like he intended.

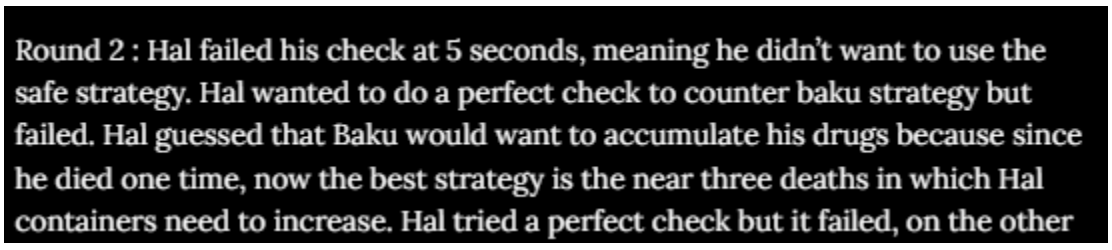

Neither were exactly aware what the other would do at an exact time.

Domino's debunk:

Answer:
Baku's main aim was to have as much drug accumulate as possible. He expected Hal to catch onto his scheme, he didn't expect him however to conclude what it is so quickly.
Statistically, 24 seconds is a below average ST, in comparison to Hal who managed to already get Baku's TTD to be 1 minute.

Domino's debunk:

Answer, Major Rebunk 1:

Okay, for this I will need to use an explanation which will also cover other stuff Domino mentioned later, namely Domino's "There are some things both of them didn't notice" panel, so I might as well put it here now.

"They are looking at totally different things right now. Both of them are looking at different things and there are different things that both of them didn't notice. Both of them have immersed themselves into their strategies and missed something they should've noticed"

*Clarification: notice, in this context, means consider/conclude.
The proof behind this is that the narrator meant 'Baku didn't notice Hal tsk'ing at the handkerchief and the volume of the Speaking Clock being lowered', but physically Baku has seen it and remembered it. However he didn't consider it at the time. He later considered it when concluding about echolocation much later on, panel:

BECAUSE THE SOUND OF THE SPEAKING CLOCK WAS HINDERING YOUR ECHOLOCATION.
"TICK".
YOU NOTICED THAT THE "TICK" SOUND OF THE SPEAKING CLOCK WAS HINDERING YOUR ECHO-LOCATION.
...
AND,
IF IT CAN BE USED TO GAIN AN ADVAN-TAGE FOR YOU IN THIS FIGHT...
NEAR THE START OF THE GAME, YOU STARTED TESTING
ECHO-LOCATION,
THE CLICK SOUND PEOPLE USE FOR ECHOLOCATION IS A HIGH FREQUENCY SOUND WHICH IS CLOSE TO THE FREQUENCY OF A SOPRANO SINGER.
SHOULD ALSO BE IN THAT HIGH FREQUENCY RANGE, CLOSE TO THE CLICKING SOUND.
AND THIS "TICK" SOUND
TICK
TICK

*This proves that what the narrator means is that neither Baku or Souichi considered these details, but only at this very moment.

For Baku, the thing he missed was obviously the volume being lowered and Hal tsk'ing at the handkerchief- checking if his echolocation is able to work.

But what is the thing that Hal has missed here?
To explain, we first need to look back on the circumstances STL has happened. Baku and Hal were supposed to meet at 7:00 AM alongside the referee for Surpassing The Leader to be held.
However, the start of Surpassing The Leader was delayed, Yakou came only at about 7:50 AM. The speaking clock started at 8:07 AM.
It is possible both for Baku to have planned for LS happening at 8 AM or 9 AM, not being certain when exactly STL would start.
That's exactly why Hal simply concluding that Baku's aim was/is using Leap Second, after Baku's 2nd time as C, isn't enough. Hal needs to find out whether Baku's plan for using Leap Second is still active (in case it happens on 9AM) or not (in case it happens on 8AM).

A) Inactive plan
Let's say for example that Baku's aim was to use Leap Second at 8 AM. Obviously, since the start of the first round happened at 8:12 AM, the LS would have already happened and Baku wouldn't be able to take advantage of it again.
IF that's the case then Baku's aim would be to give Hal hints about Leap Second (while not making it obvious that it's on purpose), for the possibility that Hal concludes Baku's aim of using Leap Second is still active, which would misdirect Hal's actions, hindering his foresight. In this case, after Baku sees Hal doing actions that would go against his LS strategy, he would be able to anticipate his thinking process and next moves. Even though LS can't directly be used anymore, with this Baku would still be able to use its existence to his advantage if Hal doesn't know the exact hour Leap Second occurs.

These hints are: still trying to make Yakou use the speaking clock and trying to delay the next round by sitting on the chair.
^Just like he did in the main story, but in the main story he didn't want Hal to catch up to Leap Second. Trying to delay the start of the next round was simply a test.
B) Active plan
Exactly what happened in the main story. Baku wants to conceal that his scheme is LS, while also trying to set it up. Baku tried to delay the next round without dying, but failed, as Yakou forced him to stand up. At that moment Hal has already concluded that Baku wants/wanted to use Leap Second, but since he isn't sure at what hour Baku aimed to use it, he has to conclude based on Baku's actions whether it was supposed to happen at:
-8:00 AM, or
-9:00 AM.

In summary:
A) if Leap Second has already activated at 8:00AM (12 minutes before the start of STL) then Baku would want to deceive Hal into thinking he still attempts to use Leap Second, without Hal knowing that Leap Second has already happened.
B) if Leap Second still has yet to happen, Baku will attempt to conceal that he wants to use Leap Second.

Hal has to conclude at which hour Baku wanted to use it.

Allow me to bring up the premises for Hal catching onto Leap Second:

Premise A, from unauthentic STL)
Baku's hidden trick is somehow related to time.

Premise B, during the preparations for actual STL)
Baku indirectly manipulated Yakou into choosing another form of measuring time, which was a speaking clock. Yakou was forced to do it as there was a possibility of Kaji modifying the physical clock he prepared in the drawer, by choosing to use the broadcasted one there would be no way for the measured time to be modified.

Premise C)
Baku attempts to delay the start of the next round by sitting on a chair, but is eventually forced to stand up by Yakou.

Now, since Hal knows about Leap Second (which is proven later, in panels from the next chapters), what could he have not noticed then?
*Look back on Baku's check in the first round. Checking in the middle of the turn is a medium risk-medium reward option.
*The only other time that has happened was Hal's first turn as C, but his check was affected by Baku's unordinary behavior which allowed him to see through Baku's intention.
*It's a decision that is the least extreme, it's less likely to make a difference than the other 2 methods (Insta Check and Safe Strategy)

Hal failed to notice Baku's true aim behind his risky check, which was checking the time alteration for 1M of the time of death. In other words with Baku's death he realized how time is altered based on deaths. The only logical reason why Baku would do this is if LS still has yet to happen.
This is what Hal failed to consider: Baku's check in the first round allowed him to know the alteration of the time based on deaths, which he would use in the future.

Hal failed to notice that Leap Second still has yet to happen and that's the reasoning behind Baku's risky check, he failed to notice Baku's intention of learning the starting alterations upon death. That's what Hal missed despite knowing that Baku's plan was/is based on LS.

Domino's debunk:

containers need to increase. Hal tried a perfect check but it failed, on the other hand baku made Hal think that he would accumulate his drugs when in FACT he wanted Hal to fail his check to enter the leap second route. Baku here deceived

Answer, Major Rebunk 2:

Before Hal's 2nd time as C, after Baku tried to postpone the start, Hal had concluded that Baku's aim was/is using Leap Second.
Hal's main goal was to check whether Baku's aim of using Leap Second is active (whether LS happens at 9:00 AM or has already happened at 8:00AM).
When Hal turned around, even Yakou was able to see Baku's astonished face. After this, Hal has connected the dots, combined with Baku's previous early check in the first round (finding out the timing) and in his Near-Death he reached the truth- the clock pointing at 9:00 AM.
Leap Second still has yet to happen, at 9:00 AM.

The clock points at 9AM, as Hal now knows this is the time Leap Second will happen.

proof for Hal finding out about LS at that time:

“He stopped it. When he stopped exaggerating the fear against the enemy in his mind, the dead man started moving, gradually retrieving the truth of his previous failure."

Exaggeration- the fact of making something seem larger, more important, better, or worse than it really is source: Cambridge dictionary

To stop exaggerating means to begin perceiving things how they really are.

The narrator just said that Baku has stopped exaggerating when he began to consider that Hal might've caught up to Leap Second after Baku attempted to delay the round.

Narrator said that Baku's fear- considering Hal already catching up to Leap Second, wasn't exaggerated, meaning that what Baku feared was reality.

Hal did catch up to LS in the 2nd round.

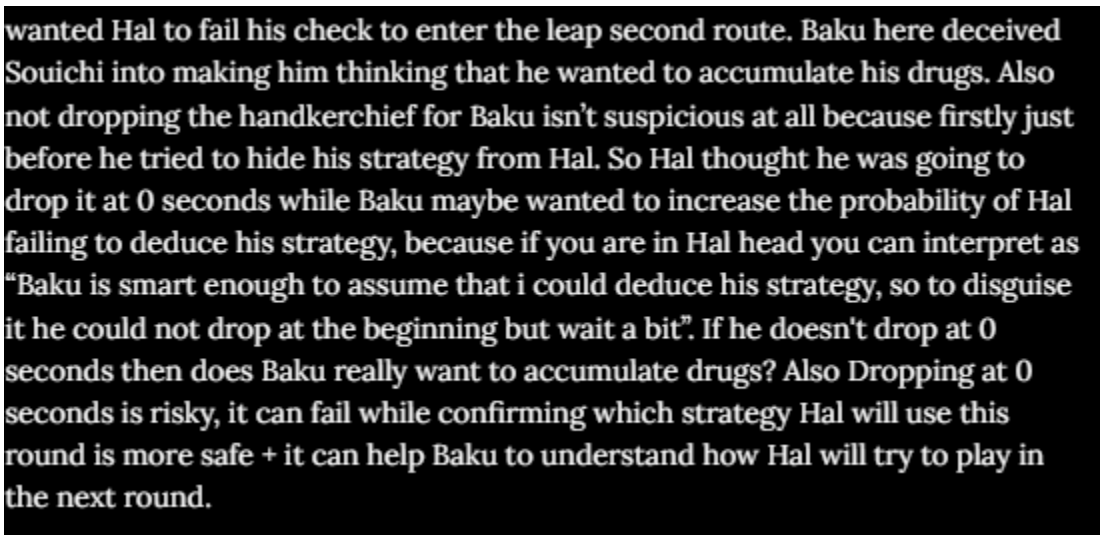

Domino's debunk:

containers need to increase. Hal tried a perfect check but it failed, on the other hand baku made Hal think that he would accumulate his drugs when in FACT he wanted Hal to fail his check to enter the leap second route. Baku here deceived

Answer:

Even though with Hal's failed check the LSR became active there was still a long time before LS actually happened. Someone dying and making LSR inactive again was almost guaranteed.

Domino's debunk:

wanted Hal to fail his check to enter the leap second route. Baku here deceived Souichi into making him thinking that he wanted to accumulate his drugs. Also not dropping the handkerchief for Baku isn't suspicious at all because firstly just before he tried to hide his strategy from Hal. So Hal thought he was going to drop it at 0 seconds while Baku maybe wanted to increase the probability of Hal failing to deduce his strategy, because if you are in Hal head you can interpret as "Baku is smart enough to assume that i could deduce his strategy, so to disguise it he could not drop at the beginning but wait a bit". If he doesn't drop at 0 seconds then does Baku really want to accumulate drugs? Also Dropping at 0 seconds is risky, it can fail while confirming which strategy Hal will use this round is more safe + it can help Baku to understand how Hal will try to play in the next round.

Answer:

This interpretation would only be possible if the narrator really stated that Hal didn't catch up to Leap Second, which was disproved by me in the 'Major Debunk 1'.

Narrator even goes against Domino's interpretation, stating that Baku's fear regarding Hal catching onto Leap Second wasn't exaggerated, 'Answer, Major Rebunk 2'

Domino's debunk (generally this section):

Last panel of chapter 501, happening at 8:20:40
The panel state "Both of them are looking at different things. And there are different things that both of them didn't notice." referring to baku leap second and all the moves he is trying to do and Hal echolocation / him manipulating the referee for it.

Now I will debunk the arguments of Jojolon in the debate that we had about this moment.

Answer:

Disproved in 'Major Rebunk 1'

Domino's debunk:

One of his first arguments was that Souichi didn't notice when the Leap second happen, the time. However, the panel says that Souichi didn't notice, notice doesn't refer to any pre knowledge that he could have and in this case, the time of the Leap second. The narrator would have said "forgot" not notice, this is

Answer:

‘Major Rebunk 1’

Domino’s debunk:

Now the next argument of Jojolon was that Hal did not know if yes or no Baku would use the leap second. But sadly for him, this is debunked by Jojolon himself who says that Hal was able to deduce LS because of Baku move, if Souichi somehow induced that there was an Leap second, then he should guess that Baku want to use it, especially when there is an premise saying that Baku MANIPULATED Yakou. This interpretation, also debunk Hal trying to remember the time of the LS in his near death, i mean if Hal still don’t know if Baku will use the LS, why would he try to remember the time, when they are only two possible time which are 9 AM and 8 AM, but as i said the panel happen at 8:20:40.
Last argument proving that this is wrong, In his doc Jojolon states that Hal had deduced leap second in round 2, that he died on purpose in order to mess up the timing of the ‘Leap Second’ route he was consciously aware of. But this is directly contradicted by this panel, it literally helped Baku.

Answer, Major Rebunk 3:

Look back on what I said carefully, I said that in the 2nd round Hal concluded that Baku’s aim was/is to use Leap Second.
Now, I already explained it to you before, even though Hal was aware that Baku had planned for his scheme to be based on LS, he didn’t know if Baku prepared himself for the LS happening at 8:00 AM or 9:00 AM.
If it turned out that Baku had planned for Leap Second happening at 8:00 AM then he wouldn’t be able to use it (due to the start of STL being delayed), despite it being his originally intended plan.
Already explained in detail in ‘Answer, Major Rebunk 1’
Bringing up the perspective of Yakou, who wasn’t yet aware that Hal had caught up to Baku’s scheme, is flawed argumentation at its finest.
Yakou didn’t know about Hal’s thoughts and his mental state. Yakou only heard about a small part of Hal’s perspective in the 10th ‘hallucination round’. By the way, here is the panel which shows that hallucination round portrayed Hal’s real thoughts, what’s more, it WAS real to Baku, Yakou and even Hal.

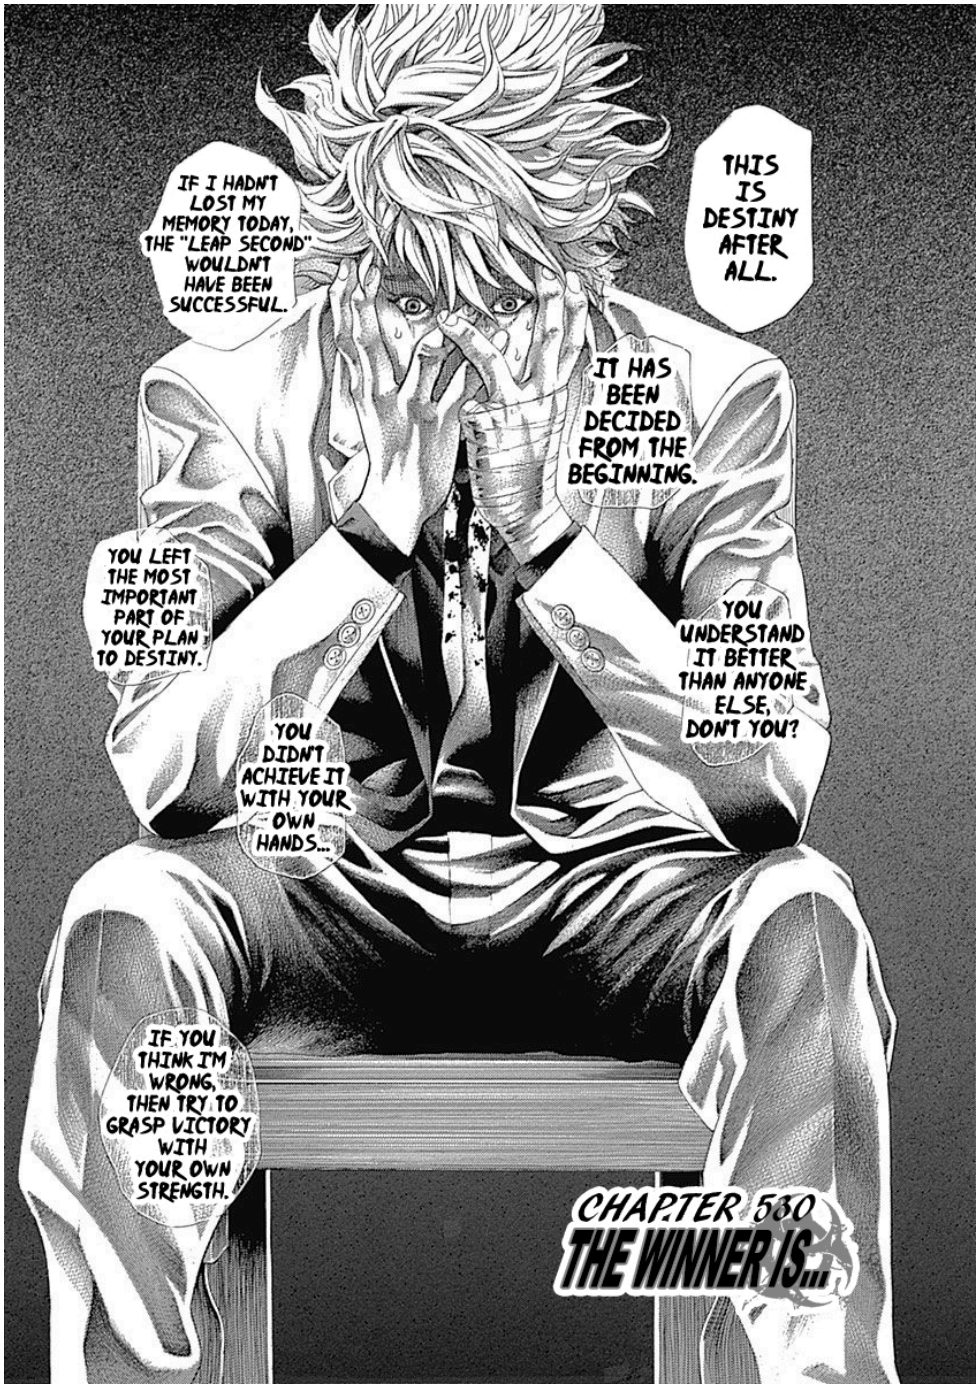

“It was reality for the two of them… No. For the three of them only”

Yakou and Baku had experienced the same things, Hal's words, actions, accumulation and his final words. Even the omniscient narrator says that it was reality, but only for the three of them. That means Hal intentionally seizing 2 seconds was reality too.

Hal managed to seize those 2 seconds, the way he did so was by Baku dropping the handkerchief in the 6th round like Hal manipulated him to and Hal making a risky Insta Check in the 7th round. With this, Hal's TTD would be 3M58S, he needs to do a risky check again, because he knows he might lose his memory about Leap Second and fall for it, with this his TTD would be 4M58S, barely enough to be safe.

“If I hadn’t lost my memory today, the Leap Second wouldn’t have been successful”

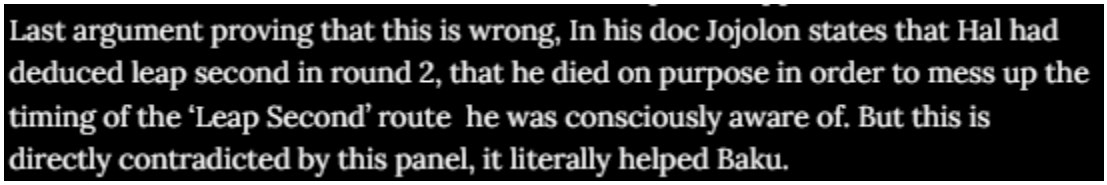

DON'T TELL ME...
YOU TOO...
BAKU-SAMA!!
YAKOU-SAN,

WAS THE...
FINAL "CHECK" ?
HOW WAS YOUR
HANDKERCHIEF THERE?

IT SEEMS LIKE
YOU SAW THE SAME THING AS I DID.
.....
NOD...
ooo

Domino makes a misconception about this being ‘just a hallucination and Baku’s subconscious interpretation’ later on in the doc, while claiming that Hal didn’t seize these 2 seconds on purpose.

Domino’s debunk:

IT ACTUALLY MADE HIM SUSPECT IF THE LEAP SECOND HAD BEEN SEEN THROUGH BY LEADER...
HE WAS REST-LESS...
SUCH AN OPPOR-TUNITY SHOWED UP IN FRONT OF HIM SO EASILY LIKE THAT...
HE WAS STILL FAR FROM VIC-TORY.
OTHERWISE, WE COULD NEVER HAVE REACHED THE LEAP SECOND.
NOTHING IS ABSOLUTE.
HE HAD TO SEE THROUGH LEADER...
THE ENEMY WAS RIGHT IN FRONT OF HIM.
BUT THAT'S NOT ALL.
USOGUI COULDN'T FOCUS FULLY ON HIS LEAP SECOND PLAN.

Answer, Major Rebunk 4:

In the first half, Domino is right, what Hal did wasn't inactivating the Leap Second, instead he opened Baku's path to Leap Second, but for it Baku wouldn't be able to use any Safe Strategies in the next rounds and would still need to die.

I was wrong about Souichi inactivating Leap Second Route, but by letting Baku activate Leap Second Route in one of the next rounds he was still 'trading deaths with him', meaning the reasoning on why Hal would die is still the same:

Some of you may ask- “Why did Hal die then? All he accomplishes with this is trading deaths with Baku, this doesn’t make sense.”.
There are 3 reasons for this.
1. It’s more dangerous for Baku to die as he has a terrible physicality as opposed to Hal.
2. Baku’s Total Time of Death (which I will now refer to as ‘TTD’) is overall bigger. The longer you are dead for, the lower are your chances of survival.

After the ‘Death Trade’ Hal planned for their TTD would look like this:
Hal’s TTD:

1m24s he has already been dead for

Baku’s TTD:

1 Minute he has already been dead for
+25 seconds of his ST
+1 minute as a penalty for a failed check
2 minutes, 25 seconds (or more)

3. With this, Hal will be able to subconsciously anticipate Baku’s next actions.

Conclusion: it’s logically more appealing for Hal to ‘trade deaths’.

Basically
3rd-4th round, 25s-29s
4th-5th round, 29s-32s
If Hal dropped the handkerchief early in the 3rd round, then Leap Second Route would collapse. If Baku then decided to die, then the interval would be equal to 8 minutes, LSR wouldn’t be active, Baku would have no reason to die on purpose yet.
Allow me to illustrate active LSR route:
8:41
8:45
8:49
8:53
8:57

Interval between rounds being 8 minutes doesn't change whether Leap Second is active or not, just like with Hal's death in 8th round, where the time simply went from 8:49→8:57 (active→active).

Baku began to suspect Hal, as he had opened him the Leap Second Route as long as he died, not knowing if Hal did it on purpose or not. Baku suspected him until his declaration in the 4th round, where Hal was consciously unaware of Baku's real scheme and even Baku wasn't able to see through Hal's true intentions.
How can you see if someone is lying when they believe what they're saying? Could you even say they're lying in the first place?

Now, if Hal didn't know about Leap Second and suspected 3 death strategy like in Domino's interpretation, then in the 3rd round he would want to drop the handkerchief immediately on the ground (like he consciously intended, but wasn't able to), because the chance of Baku using a Safe Strategy would be very high.

Domino's explanation of 'Hal didn't drop the handkerchief, because he got scared of Baku's aura' doesn't make sense. We've seen that Hal is able to see through the intentions of Baku's actions many times, even quicker than Baku anticipated. After Air Poker and achieving Perfect Mode, Hal wouldn't be limited by his 'instinct' unless he's the one who intentionally made that instinct in the first place.

In Domino's explanation, Hal fully believed that Baku would use Safe Strategy for his 3 Death Strategy, but didn't drop the handkerchief instantly, because he got scared of Baku's aura.

In my explanation, Hal consciously believed in 3 Death Strategy, but wasn't able to drop the handkerchief due to his subconscious knowledge of Leap Second limiting him. That's the reason behind his internal conflict, he created himself a wedge that will help him win this Surpassing The Leader. If he dropped the handkerchief early then Leap Second Route would collapse and Hal wouldn't be able to anticipate and direct Baku's next actions, not even being able to 'Trade Deaths' anymore. What Hal says later about his 'instinct' and 'aura' are the conscious explanations he made himself have, upon no logical basis, until we realize that the instinct he is referring to is his Leap Second knowledge, which he remembered, but then forgot on purpose.

“When the dark clouds announced by his previous Near-Death finally disappeared, he finally retrieved the truth which he reached in the Near-Death and then everything in front of him went dark once again”

What this means is that Hal was retrieving his reasoning for turning around in the 2nd round (Baku potentially using Leap Second) as well as the truth from his Near Death (the clock pointing at 9:00AM- Baku intending to use Leap Second on 9:00AM), but forgetting it once again.

“Everything in front of him went dark once again”, Hal forgot the truth which he retrieved, then he made himself think that he challenged Baku and lost.

Why would Hal forget something for no reason, with PM? Especially something that happened just a few minutes ago?

The answer is Hal forgot it on purpose, just like with his death experiences in Air Poker, while his subconscious knowledge of it still directed his actions.

Hal can remember and forget things at his will, as long as it allows him to win.

I think the most obvious interpretation of this is “Whether to remember, or forget, is all at my will”
and “Whether to create, or destroy the wedge is all at my will”
As long as it allows Hal to win.

I'M SORRY, BUT...
REFEREE MANABE,
PAIN IS.
I'VE ERASED THE WEDGE.

Hal forgetting his death experiences in Air Poker to win, while still being aware that he went through those.

More proof about Hal catching up to Leap Second, but forgetting it. „I've known for a while", Hal wouldn't say ‚for a while' if he had concluded it just in his second near-death (which just happened) in Domino's interpretation.

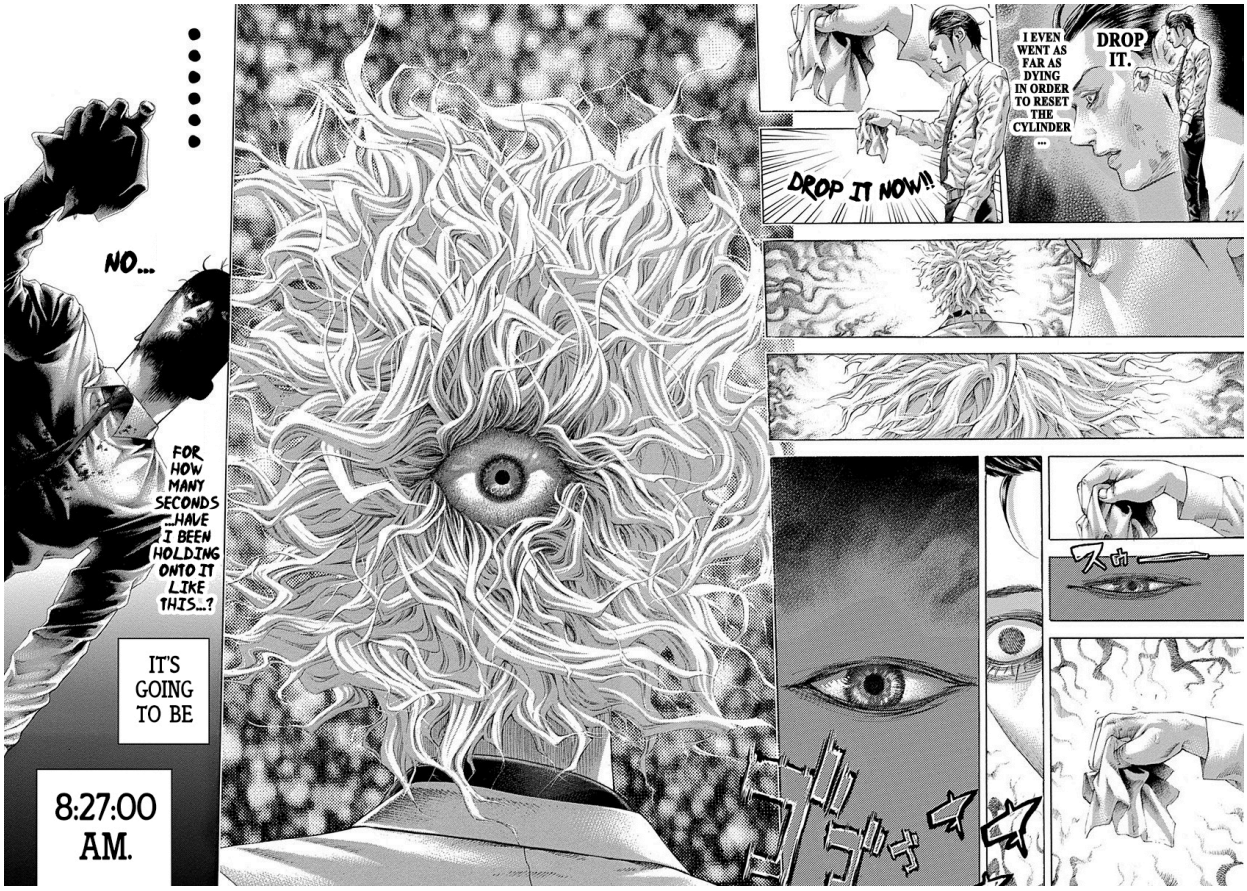

^Here is the round which he was talking about and the 3rd round for you to see the similarities:

7th round- Hal is still subconsciously aware of Leap Second, but without Perfect Mode he can't remember it. While Hal's PM in the 3rd round was active, he was unable to even think that what he did was a good choice, as opposed to Hal in 9th round who ‘knew’ Baku won’t turn around.

I think the similarities are obvious.

That’s not the only time Baku had to use Safe Strategy, the 7th, 8th and 9th rounds also had Baku using it. Yet Hal was able to drop the handkerchief instantly, as it aligned with his knowledge of LS.
Hal knew that Baku won’t turn around (risking deactivating the LSR) and despite the ‘aura’ Domino talked about, Hal was still able to drop it just fine.
The only reason why Hal didn’t drop the handkerchief instantly in the 3rd round was because it would cause Baku to accumulate too much ND-drug and would make him incapable of setting up LSR, with this Souichi would be incapable of ‘trading deaths’ and would be unaware of Baku’s next actions (for example: him knowing that when LSR is set up Baku will use Safe Strategies etc.).

Domino's debunk:

> Anyway, the most important debunk is more about the panel of the narrator and nothing implies that Souichi deduced it at that moment, The Narrator literally says the inverse.

Answer:
Major Rebunk 1

Domino's debunk

> So the conclusion is : Hal didn't notice the leap second while Baku didn't notice echolocation. That means that Hal didn't conceal to Baku that he knew it and that he didn't die on purpose as i explained. Hal dying was literally the BEST move for Baku, this is what he wanted so Hal dying on purpose is literally the worst possible move considering that in his interpretation he could have forgotten about the leap second.

Answer:
Major Rebunk 1,
Hal didn't notice Baku's action of timing the death- LS still has yet to happen, Baku still intending to use it

Baku didn't notice Hal tsk'ing at the handkerchief and the volume being lowered- Hal intending to use echolocation

Domino's debunk:

In this panel, we can see a clock pointing at 9 AM which could refer to Hal understanding the leap second right? Hmm not at all, we already explained with the Narrator statement that Hal didn't know the leap second, so Basically as Sako

Answer:

Major Rebunk 2

Domino's debunk:

the Narrator statement that Hal didn't know the leap second, so Basically as Sako loves to do it, this is foreshadowing (i will post every foreshadowing at the end). In Jojolon interpretation, Hal didn't know about when the leap second appear and he this clock is here, because in his near death Souichi is in perfect mode and therefore can remember the time, however this is wrong. Let me explain,

Answer:

This serves as the foreshadowing of both Baku going to use Leap Second and the fact that Hal at this moment caught up to Leap Second. Foreshadowings aside from writing perspective also often have canonical explanations.

About PM- I thought that Hal is constantly in his Perfect Mode, if that isn't the case, then my bad. Even then it doesn't change my point about Hal concluding/remembering when Leap Second is going to happen at that time.

Domino's debunk:

wrong, all started from a lie... then Hal in his near death, remembered all this information and he is like what? "who i was trying to turn into" and then he saw his father, who said ' ' i didn't expect you would come' ' which should basically refer to Hal reaching the place in which His perfect mode lives and this is Why, after his death Hal enters in perfect mode.

Answer:

This is probably correct, but it doesn't change my point about Hal concluding/remembering at what moment Leap Second happens.

Domino's debunk:

Last part about it
So in the near death and by explanation clearly show that Hal wasn't in PM and by Jojolon interpretation at that time Hal knows about the Leap second, so one question, why Hal wasn't able to remember it when he lost his PM in round 8? i will give you the answer, Hal never deduced the leap second at that moment

Answer:

Because at that moment Hal lost all of his memories about this gamble. That's why he had to ask Yakou to summarize what's happening for him.

Domino's debunk:

Now let's talk about that panel interpreted it as Hal seeing through the leap second but again that's wrong. As I already explained above, Baku was surprised because Hal literally opened the leap second route for him making him suspect that he did, this was explained by Yakou. The panel say "he stopped it" which refer to the fear of Hal possibly seeing through leap second, "when he stopped augmentating the fear against the enemy in his" so when Baku started to manage this fears he stopped it, nothing indicate that Hal deduced the leap second.

Answer:

This panel is about Hal remembering that Baku is going to use Leap Second.
Narrator literally stated that Baku stopped exaggerating the fear the moment he considered Hal catching up to Leap Second, but the narrator never said Baku stopped the fear.
And after that the narrator literally says that Hal began to uncover the truth he reached in his near death, where the clock pointed at 9:00 AM- Baku is going to use Leap Second at 9:00 AM.

Just check out 'Major Rebunk 2'.

Domino's debunk:

Now this is yakou describing Baku Aura of determination which was so strong that Hal thought that Baku would perfect check if he drop it

Answer:

'Major Rebunk 4'

Domino's debunk:

So now to debunk Jojolon, this is not because Souichi was subconsciously aware of the leap second that he didn't dropped it (if he did baku would not enter the route) but because Souichi was trying to remember his death and because the aura of Baku was so strong. Hal says "i went as far as dying" but this is contradicted just after, he still didn't had retrieves everything and didn't though he made an mistake, he was trying to remember if he did or no but at the same time Baku aura was there, this is why he didn't knew what he should do since he didn't even had enough information and thought that Baku would perfect if he dropped it, Hal was misdirected into the near three death strategy

Answer:

First of all, no successful insta check has happened yet, if Hal dropped it at the beginning and Baku made a successful check then there was a possibility that the next round might start earlier (from their perspective). Hal mainly couldn't risk that Baku will use a Safe Strategy (which he did), because he needed Baku to not have too much ST, so he will still aim to die to set up LSR.

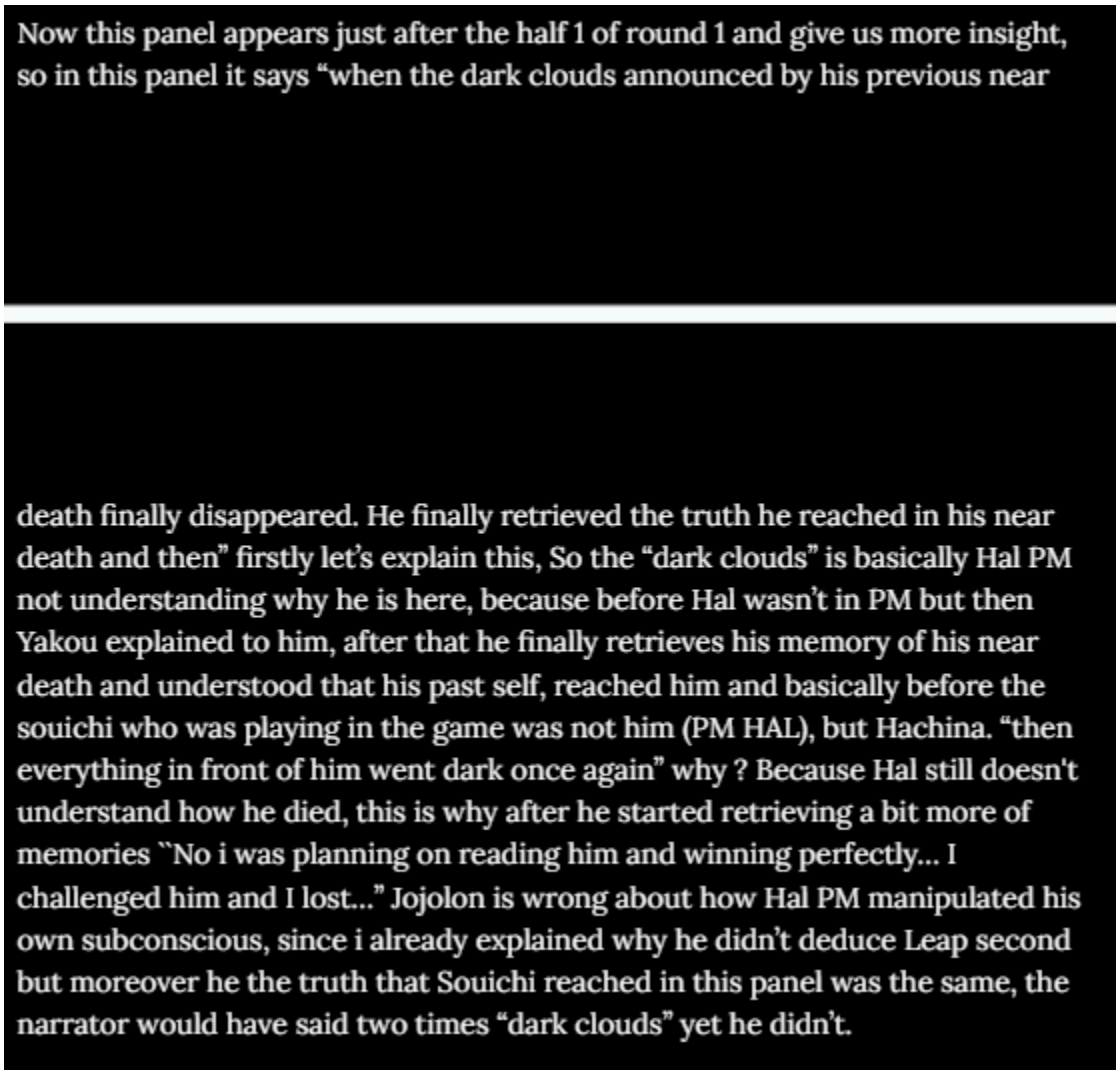

If Hal dropped the handkerchief at the beginning then the interval between rounds upon Baku's death would be 8 minutes, it wouldn't change whether LSR is active or not. That's why Hal made it look like a regular late drop, hoping that Baku will turn around early expecting him to accumulate his ND-drug.

If Hal did an Insta Drop then Baku wouldn't be able to set up Leap Second Route anymore.

Hal would only want to do an insta drop if he expected Baku to aim for 3 Death Strategy, which he consciously did, but was limited by his wedge he himself created.

Already explained this in 'Major Rebunk 4'.

Domino's debunk:

Answer:

Major Rebunk 4 about the panel

Major Rebunk 3 about Hal catching up to Leap Second

Major Rebunk 1 about what Hal exactly reached with his Near Death

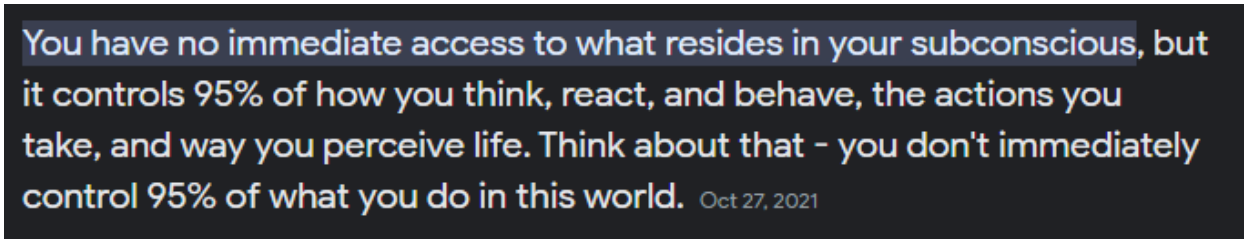

Domino's debunk:

Again, a panel stating that "NO ONE CAN KNOW WHY YET" which includes Souichi Subconscious, no one knows why Baku can't fail a check anymore but this is because if he did he would fail the leap second route as explained by Yakou at the end. Confirming again that Souichi doesn't know about leap second, obviously you will try to say that he is referring to the near three death strategy but this is wrong since firstly in a narrative view, the narrator stating that while we know that Baku has a hidden plan make a lot of sense, CONSIDERING that just after the narrator is talking about Baku face which is because he thought HAL deduced leap second, so the narrator is not talking about the near three death strategy

Answer:

It doesn't include Hal's subconsciousness.
Think of it this way:
Does Baku know why he can't use Safe Strategy? Yes
Do referees know why Baku can't use Safe Strategy? No
Does Souichi know why Baku can't use Safe Strategy? No, his PM makes him unable of it

You don't know about most things your subconsciousness does, even though it affects your thinking and actions.

You don't know about most of the things that happen within your subconscious. You can search up on the internet the difference between subconsciousness and consciousness.

Hal would only know it when he consciously remembers Leap Second. The narrator didn't mean literally everyone, he excluded Baku (obviously) and Hal's subconsciousness, as there is a difference between being aware of something consciously (knowing) and subconsciously.

Domino's debunk:

so this is from Jojolon doc and i as explained, Hal was trying to remember at the same time of witnessing Baku inhuman aura making him think that Baku would perfect check if he drop it, this is he was confused and ended interpreting this aura baku not being able to use the safe strategy anymore which would make him fail the near three death strategy if he did (too much drugs). This is why, Souichi drop it after realizing it

Answer:

Explained in 'Major Rebunk 4'

Domino's debunk:

round 4: "Hal drops the handkerchief after 7 seconds, Baku checks at about 10 seconds.
Baku makes a successful check, the additional ST is 3 seconds.

In reality, Baku's goal in this round was to die without making it obvious (which is why he checked at 10 seconds, instead of 5 or 3)"

this is from Jojolon doc

Answer:

My mistake, Hal had to drop the handkerchief in the late part of the turn so that Baku, who uses Safe Strategy, can still activate LSR.
In case Baku turned around earlier then Hal's goal would still be fulfilled, as the 'death trade' would happen.
Explained in 'Major Rebunk 4'

Domino's debunk:

So here is all the proof for what i'm going to explain, Yakou says that Baku in round 3 was too far away from the leap second, he couldn't die. He clearly explained that if Baku died, tried to reset his container he would make his container run out of space before the leap second. Ranko explained that by dy

Answer:

Baku had to risk dying in the later rounds, round 4, round 5 or round 6.
If Baku's ST accumulated too much then he wouldn't be able to set up LSR.
With this Baku was forced to check early.

Domino's debunk:

container run out of space before the leap second. Ranko explained that by dying at round 6, Baku made the game resume at 8:43:00, 16 minutes before the round of the leap second and guess what? One half without anyone dying = 2 minutes 1 round = 2 half = 4 minutes, so 16 minutes = 4 round, Baku by resetting here can use the safe strategy 4 times before the leap second happen, which debunk the idea of Baku wanting to died round 4 or round 5 and therefore debunk everything of Hal manipulating Baku to died as soon as possible.

Answer, Major Rebunk 5:

You're wrong, by dying in the 6th round Baku has made the game resume at 8:45AM.

If Baku made the game resume on 8:43AM then the route would look like this

8:43
8:47
8:51
8:55
8:59- LS would happen on BAKU's turn as C

The round needs to begin on 8:57 AM for Leap Second to happen on Hal's turn as C
8:57-8:58, Baku's turn as C

8:58-8:59, 1 minute break between turns
8:59-9:00, Hal's turn as C, Leap Second happens

Starting from round 4 Baku has to constantly do early checks, because if he were to use Safe Strategy then his ST could accumulate enough to the point the interval between the rounds would be 8 minutes, Baku would be incapable of activating LSR.
Baku also had to risk doing so in the 5th round, with Hal's consciousness claiming to prevent him from using 3 Death Strategy with the explanation being Yakou's deteriorating state. Baku's early check succeeded at that round.
Hal hoped for Baku to die for good here (in the 6th round), but Baku was lucky and survived. Thanks to this Hal allowed Baku to constantly use Safe Strategies until the Leap Second- that's why he was dropping the handkerchief instantly on the ground, even after losing PM and being incapable of consciously knowing about Leap Second. Baku wouldn't risk using anything other than Safe Strategies when LSR is active and LS is 3 rounds away.
Hal, by half-bluffing about Yakou's physical state, was also able to get Baku to drop the handkerchief early, first making sure it's actually dropped.
Then, Hal made a gamble on the 7th round (after Baku sits in the ground), he successfully saw through Baku and only accumulated 1S of ST.
With this, he intentionally risked dying in the 8th round, in case he doesn't die it's even better for him, in case he does he will empty his cylinder with his TTD being 4M58S even after Leap Second happens (with him losing his memory).
Once again, Hal did it intentionally due to his knowledge about Leap Second, explanation in 'Major Rebunk 3'

Domino's debunk:

Answer:

Which we know didn't happen. Ranko was unaware that Souichi caught up to LS, meaning her statement that 'Baku fully saw through Hal' was invalid.

Domino's debunk:

which is why he couldn't use the safe strategy anymore. Furthermore, this round was the best time to die the first time, because if he took too many drugs at one point, his strategy wouldn't work anymore. But Hal had understood all this perfectly well and had long since countered Baku's strategy, paving the way for what was to come. As i said Hal did what baku wanted because now Baku in Hal perspective he will be forced to drop at 0 seconds the next round to stop Hal, Hal will then not turn but deceive Baku (in fact Baku deceived Hal while making think he was deceived), Baku thought Hal will turn to use the near three death strategy but he didn't, which mean he manipulated Baku making him thinking he will use it while in fact he do not wants to died, Hal will also be able to check just after so that his squandered time isn't too much but in fact all this was planned by Baku, Baku knew Hal will counter his strategy in the round 5th (stated by ranko that Baku had to died round 6 + unless he saw through kiruma")

Answer:

Terribly structured sentence, I had to wonder what Domino might be talking about.

Okay, so Domino said that the fourth round is the best round for Baku to risk dying in case he uses 3 Death Strategy. I need to clarify that in LS strategy Baku also needed to do an early check, risking his death, because he couldn't risk accumulating too much ST with his Safe Strategies since the 4th round (risking 8 minute intervals between rounds- not changing the activity of LSR).

Explanation in 'Major Rebunk 4'

Baku at that time really wanted to prevent Hal from turning around and dying, reasoning:

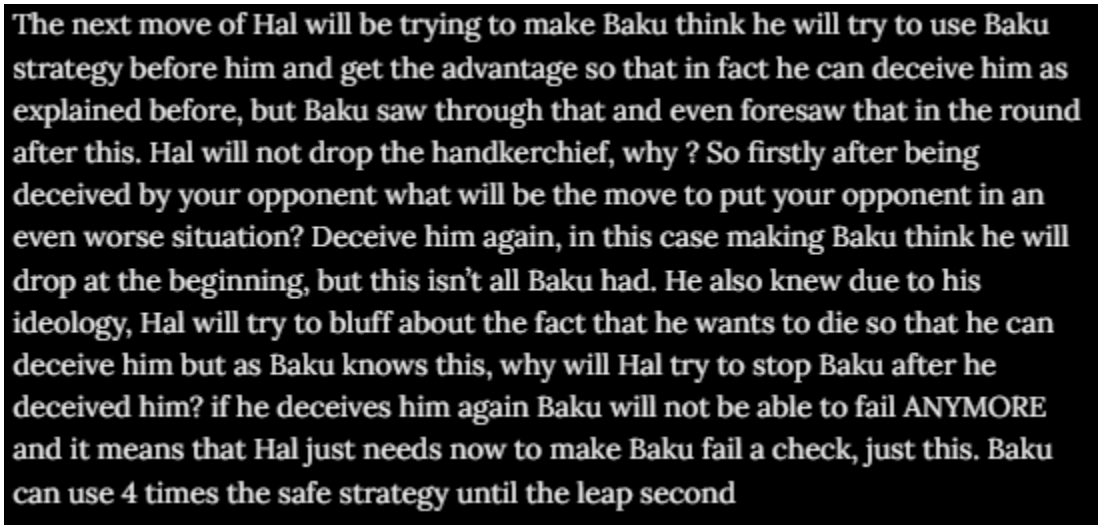

-Partially because of the 'Yakou's physical state' statement, Baku wanted to be the first one to die as Yakou's CPRs became ineffective. Even with Baku dying first he was only barely revived, if he died later then it's very likely he wouldn't be able to be revived.

-Baku wanted to accumulate Hal's ND-drug, then kill him off with Leap Second. He didn't want Hal to reset his cylinder.

-This was a perfect opportunity for Baku to die. LSR would be active, he would be able to use Safe Strategies until Leap Second and he could also disguise his actions as '3 Death Strategy'.

And like I said, Ranko's statement of "Baku fully saw through Kiruma" is false as she wasn't aware that Hal caught up to Leap Second, at all.

Domino's debunk:

Answer:

The most logical answer is that Baku will still try to die as he has the perfect excuse- 'I want to die first before Yakou depletes his energy', with this Baku thinks he can effectively conceal his Leap Second Strategy from Hal, not knowing that Hal is already subconsciously aware of it.

Domino's debunk:

Answer:

That's right, Baku didn't want Hal to reset his cylinder. He wanted Hal to accumulate as much ND-Drug as possible for his TTD to be >=5M after using Leap Second, with which Hal would instantly lose.

^That was Baku's aim, unaware that Hal had caught up to Leap Second and seized 2 seconds in case he lost his memory. If Hal didn't lose his memory then seizing 2 seconds wouldn't matter and he would know to check on 61st second anyway.

Domino's debunk:

From jojolon doc

So obviously Hal is not aware of the leap second. Baku's aura of determination is present, the aim is to make Hal not let him go because he knows that if he does, Baku will do an instant check. But Hal will still drop him at 0 seconds, Souichi has the advantage over Baku, he has echolocation which makes him invincible in the game, so it's the best play to accumulate drugs and then make him fail and die directly, moreover baku will think that because of his aura he will not drop. Baku's aura was designed to keep Hal in place so that he could use the safe strategy, but Hal understands this and with the advantages he has, he can easily afford to make this move. It's even advantageous for him and it goes against Baku's plan. However Baku doesn't care at all, baku want to clock the leap second and he died to be able to have at least 4 safe strategy, so Hal can either drop or not he doesn't matter for Baku, the aura was here to make Hal think that he doesn't want him to drop the handkerchief while in fact he doesn't care but if Hal discovered this then he could have discovered the leap second, it's a safe move because in the HAL pov as i explained baku put the aura to make hal think he will perfect check but he doesn't want in fact he doesn't care

Answer:

Hal was aware of Baku's Leap Second. Look at the Major Rebunks again. That's exactly why he knew Baku would likely try to make his drug accumulate before Leap Second, not wanting Hal to reset his cylinder, with this Hal took the risk and turned around in the 7th round as he needed to. It was likely the handkerchief was on the ground, based on Baku's previous actions.

Hal did the same thing in the 8th round, but due to Baku realizing that Hal might aim just to constantly do Insta Checks (meaning it's impossible for Baku to accumulate Hal's ND-Drug)- he didn't drop the handkerchief, causing Souichi to die.

Hal was doing insta checks like this on purpose. He manipulated Baku into likely dropping the handkerchief early (in the 5th round) in case Baku wants to die first.

Baku wanted to ‘die first’ as the CPRs after that wouldn’t be very effective, even though Baku could’ve believed that Hal would want to turn around early, Baku still dropped the handkerchief as it was him who needed to die to set up LSR. Baku would need to die anyway, it’s better to be able to use Safe Strategies before LS to make sure LSR remains active.
Baku wanted to be able to use Safe Strategies before LS, to ensure LSR remained active, he needed to die.
That’s why Baku prevented Hal from dying and instead died first, making sure that Yakou’s CPRs will be as effective as possible (and even then just BARELY surviving).
With this manipulation, in the 2nd half of the 5th round, Hal made sure to have Baku drop the handkerchief early and used his echolocation within 15 seconds, confirming it’s safe to turn around.
After that Hal was able to get 8S in the 6th round and then take the risk in the 7th round, as it was most likely Baku will try to make Souichi’s drug accumulate (wanting to kill him off with Leap Second, accumulation being >=5 minutes).
After this, Baku realized that Hal might just constantly do Insta Checks, meaning he isn’t able to accumulate his ND-Drug like he intended to, so he didn’t drop the handkerchief and caused Souichi to die.
Baku didn’t want Hal resetting the cylinder before Leap Second, his aim was to accumulate the ND-drug (reasoning behind his actions in 1st round and 7th round as D) and then finish off Hal with Leap Second.

Proof of Souichi seizing those 2 seconds on purpose (proof that what he said was real in ‘Major Rebunk 3’):

It would be useless for Hal to seize these 2 seconds without being aware of Leap Second and potential memory loss.

In Domino's interpretation Hal anticipated he might lose his memory, but didn't anticipate Leap Second, while seizing these 2 seconds. In this case, it wouldn't make sense for Hal to seize those 2 seconds in the first place.

After dying in the 8th round, Hal would still have 5 or more Safe Strategies left.
It wouldn't make sense for Hal to seize these 2 seconds if he didn't expect to die, what's more, if Hal wasn't aware of Leap Second then by using Safe Strategy in the 8th round he would make the best use of his cylinder, while still keeping his TTD below 5 minutes.

In my interpretation, Hal was aware that he might lose his memory, which is why he seized these 2 seconds just in case.
Hal anticipated he might lose his memory, so even after Leap Second (+1M of death) he would have 4M58S (<5M) TTD and 5 Safe Strategies after a revival.
If Hal didn't lose his memory then the outcome wouldn't change much and he would still have 5 Safe Strategies after Leap Second, as he would know to check at 61st second in the 9th round, giving him just an additional second of ST.
-In my interpretation, Hal perfectly shielded himself from Leap Second succeeding in case he loses his memory, by ensuring that his TTD after second death will be <4M, and after LS, third death, <5M. That's his reasoning for checking early in the 8th round.
-In Domino's interpretation, Hal has recklessly wasted his cylinder's potential by dying for 3M58S combined TTD (instead of checking at about 53 seconds, giving him a good chance of being able to die a round later, which would result in ~4M51S TTD). Here, in Domino's interpretation, Hal has wasted almost an entire minute of drug accumulation, not nullifying it.

Domino here goes both against the omniscient narrator (Hal seizing these 2 seconds) and Hal's intelligence.

Even more in detail in Major Rebunk 4

Domino's debunk:

Obviously it's wrong since Souichi doesn't know the leap second, if he did he wouldn't have let Baku enter the route two times (3 and 6). The narrator state two times that Souichi didn't noticed the leap second and i will show a third time, if he did after losing his PM he should have remembered it but he didn't, Souichi deducing LS round 2 contradict also all the referee.

Answer:

Souichi let Baku enter the LSR (by dying) so he and Baku essentially trade deaths with Hal also being aware of Baku's next actions. Even the Leap Second itself would be a waste of a turn for Baku.

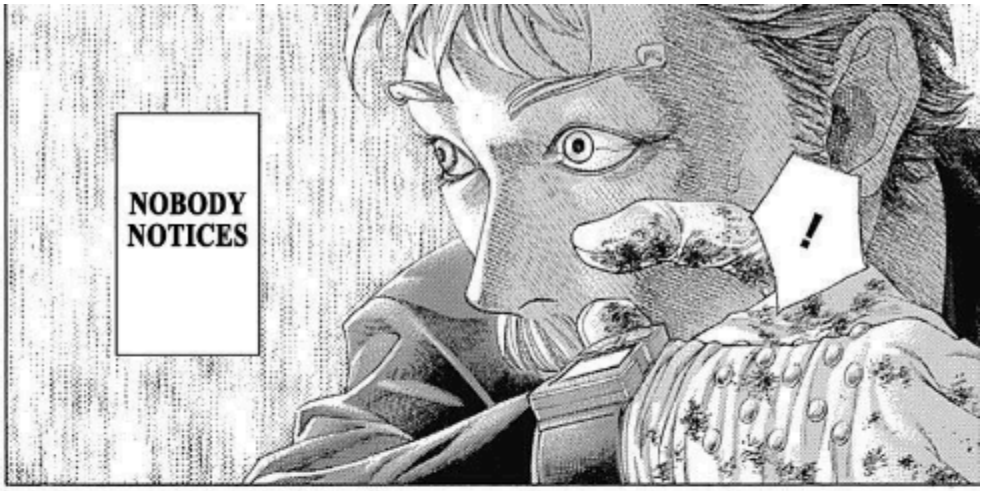

Also what do you expect Hal to do in the 6th round? Constantly make Baku do successful Insta checks until Leap Second is incapable of happening?
💀💀💀💀💀
That'd benefit Baku much more than the Leap Second itself. 6th round has happened on 8:38 AM, there are still 22 minutes left, meaning that Hal would have to make Baku do Insta Checks for the next 3 rounds straight AT THE MINIMUM (with Hal already doing this in 4th and 5th rounds), assuming Hal doesn't die in the meantime he would have to let Baku do Insta Checks for the next 5 rounds STRAIGHT.
Do you realize how much of a game-changer that would be for Baku?
All Leap Second does is make Hal fail his check, ONCE (and for that we need to assume that Hal loses his memory). Baku's aim was for Hal to not reset his cylinder before Leap Second happens (but Hal does it anyway, seizing 2 seconds), but since he's incapable of it (due to Hal's echolocation), he makes Hal die instead.
Instead you're proposing that Hal should give Baku good checks for 8 rounds straight, since he was allowing Baku to set up LSR ever since the 3rd round (and kind of since the second round, when Hal died).
Obviously, Baku constantly having good checks like this would be much more beneficial for him than Leap Second itself, so it's a terrible decision.

For Hal, seizing those 2 seconds was the best choice and if he didn't lose his memory he would now be aware that Baku drops the handkerchief on 61st second, he would easily win.

All the referees are unaware of Hal catching up to Leap Second, even Yakou until the hallucination round.

Domino’s debunk:

Here again a panel from the narrator saying that NOBODY notices what he's doing, at that moment Baku wasn't doing anything so it refers to Baku's general move in the game and debunks once again Hal knowing about it.

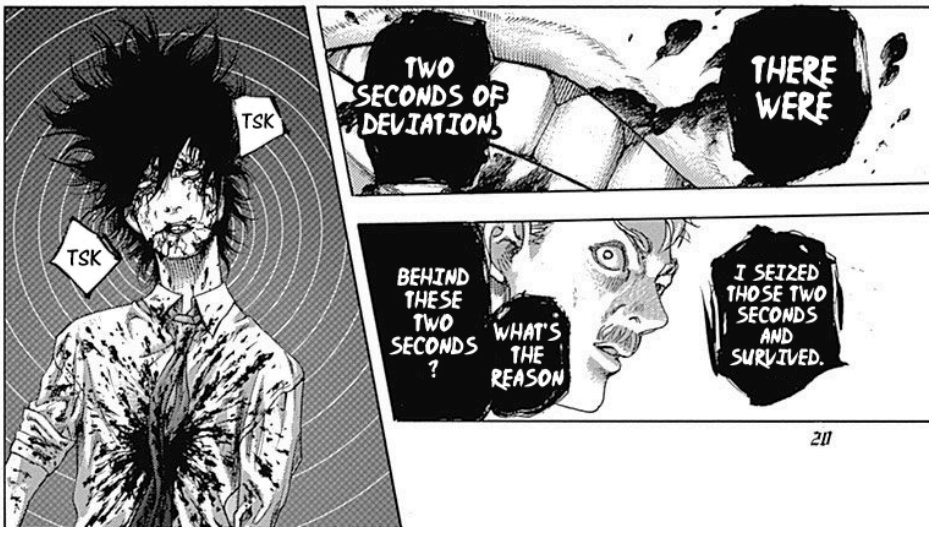

Answer, Major Rebunk 6:

Time for a quick english class:
Do you know what's the difference between 'notices' and 'noticed'?
The difference is that 'notices' is in present simple, it's about actively seeing through the intent of Baku's actions, which Hal can't do as his PM is making him incapable of it.
Present simple is a tense that is used to refer to events, actions, and conditions that are happening all the time, or exist now
source: Cambridge dictionary

Since what the narrator says next is „yet" and "what he's doing either" he's obviously referring to Hal not actively noticing the intent of Baku's actions, as 'doing' is in present continuous.
Definition: the verb form used for actions or events that are happening or developing now
source: Cambridge dictionary

Now, it means that Hal isn't actively seeing through the intent of Baku's actions, as he did so much earlier, reaching the truth in his first Near-Death. The hallucination of Hal confirmed that he seized the 2 seconds in 6th, 7th and 8th rounds on purpose, this means he must've been subconsciously 'aware' of Leap Second at that time, based on this statement alone. These panels alone prove that the narrator meant Hal not actively seeing through Baku's intentions, as his PM made him unable to.

TSK

TWO SECONDS OF DEVIATION.
THERE WERE
BEHIND THESE TWO SECONDS ?
WHAT'S THE REASON
I SEIZED THOSE TWO SECONDS AND SURVIVED.

Once again, this proves Hal's true aim, as the narrator confirmed that what happened at this moment was reality for Baku, Yakou and Hal.

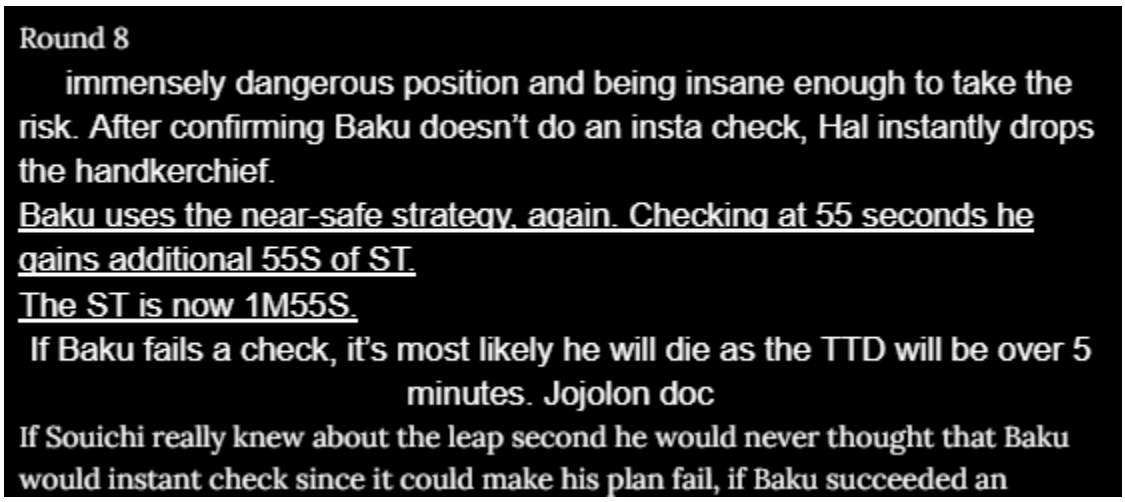

These panels alone confirm that by the time 6th round happened Hal was 'aware' of Leap Second (directed by subconscious knowledge of it) and started saving up enough time for his TTD to be below 5 minutes after potentially falling for Leap Second. The panel Domino used was from the 7th round.

This makes the “Nobody notices” panel contradictory in Domino’s explanation (with these panels alone), with my interpretation fitting perfectly.
Hal used his Perfect Mode to forget about Leap Second until it’s his turn as C at 8:59AM. He was directed by his subconscious knowledge of Leap Second which he consciously referred to as his instinct. With PM making Hal incapable of seeing through Baku’s intent until that point, he can’t actively see through Baku’s intentions, even though he is subconsciously ‘aware’ of them.

Domino’s debunk:

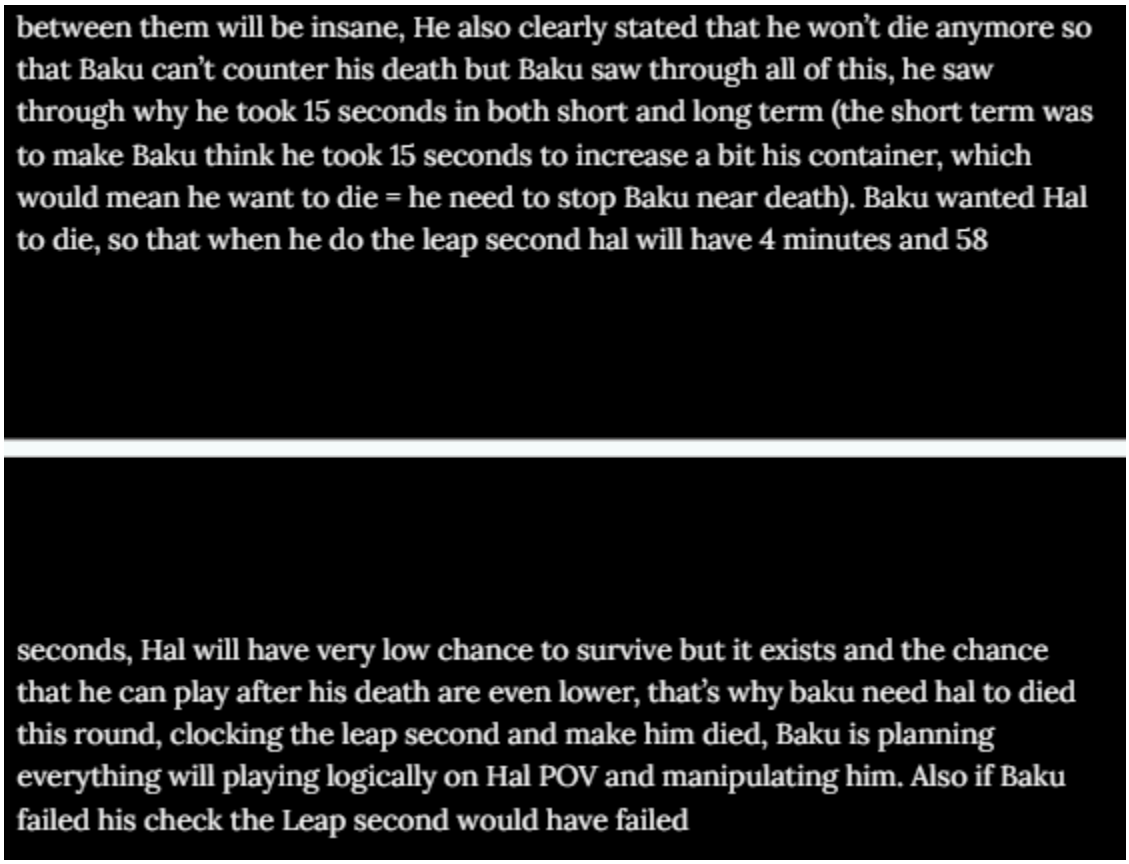

Round 8
immensely dangerous position and being insane enough to take the risk. After confirming Baku doesn’t do an insta check, Hal instantly drops the handkerchief.
Baku uses the near-safe strategy, again. Checking at 55 seconds he gains additional 55S of ST.
The ST is now 1M55S.
If Baku fails a check, it’s most likely he will die as the TTD will be over 5 minutes. Jojolon doc
If Souichi really knew about the leap second he would never thought that Baku would instant check since it could make his plan fail, if Baku succeeded an

Answer:
Most importantly: I stated theoretically that if Baku now fails a check he will die, that means that for the upcoming rounds he will definitely use Safe Strategies. That was simply a reasoning on why Hal dropped the handkerchief early in the 9th round.

Additionally: you didn’t consider the fact that Hal planned to be revived after Leap Second (confirmed even in the last Major Rebunk). After the 9th round Baku would need to risk doing Insta Checks as it'd be the only way to close the gap between his and Hal's accumulation, but as we were shown in the hallucination rounds it wouldn't work. If at that point Baku failed a check he would die.

Domino's debunk:

Answer:

Baku wanted Hal's TTD to be above 5 minutes after Leap Second, but he failed with Hal seizing 2 seconds. The chance of Hal being revived was relatively high, as the only reason why it didn't happen was due to Yakou's CPRs being ineffective. After Kaji and Marco entered the building it's likely Marco performed a successful CPR on Hal and Hal was still revived.

As for 5th round Hal manipulated Baku with 'Whoever dies first gets the advantage' to make him drop the handkerchief early, using echolocation and checking successfully with a small amount of ST.

Domino's debunk:

> Hal never seized those seconds that could save him on purpose, he just checked quickly as possible. This is baku hallucination in which he is talking to himself and inventing what Hal would have said, he failed to fill up his container because Hal was able to check quickly in round 7 & 8. Hal literally never implied that he did it because he had anticipated that he would lose his memory of the leap second.

Answer:

Explained in Major Rebunk 3, directly contradicted by the narrator.

Hal knows that Leap Second will happen, I already proved that. He anticipated he might lose his memory, so just in case he seized those 2 seconds.

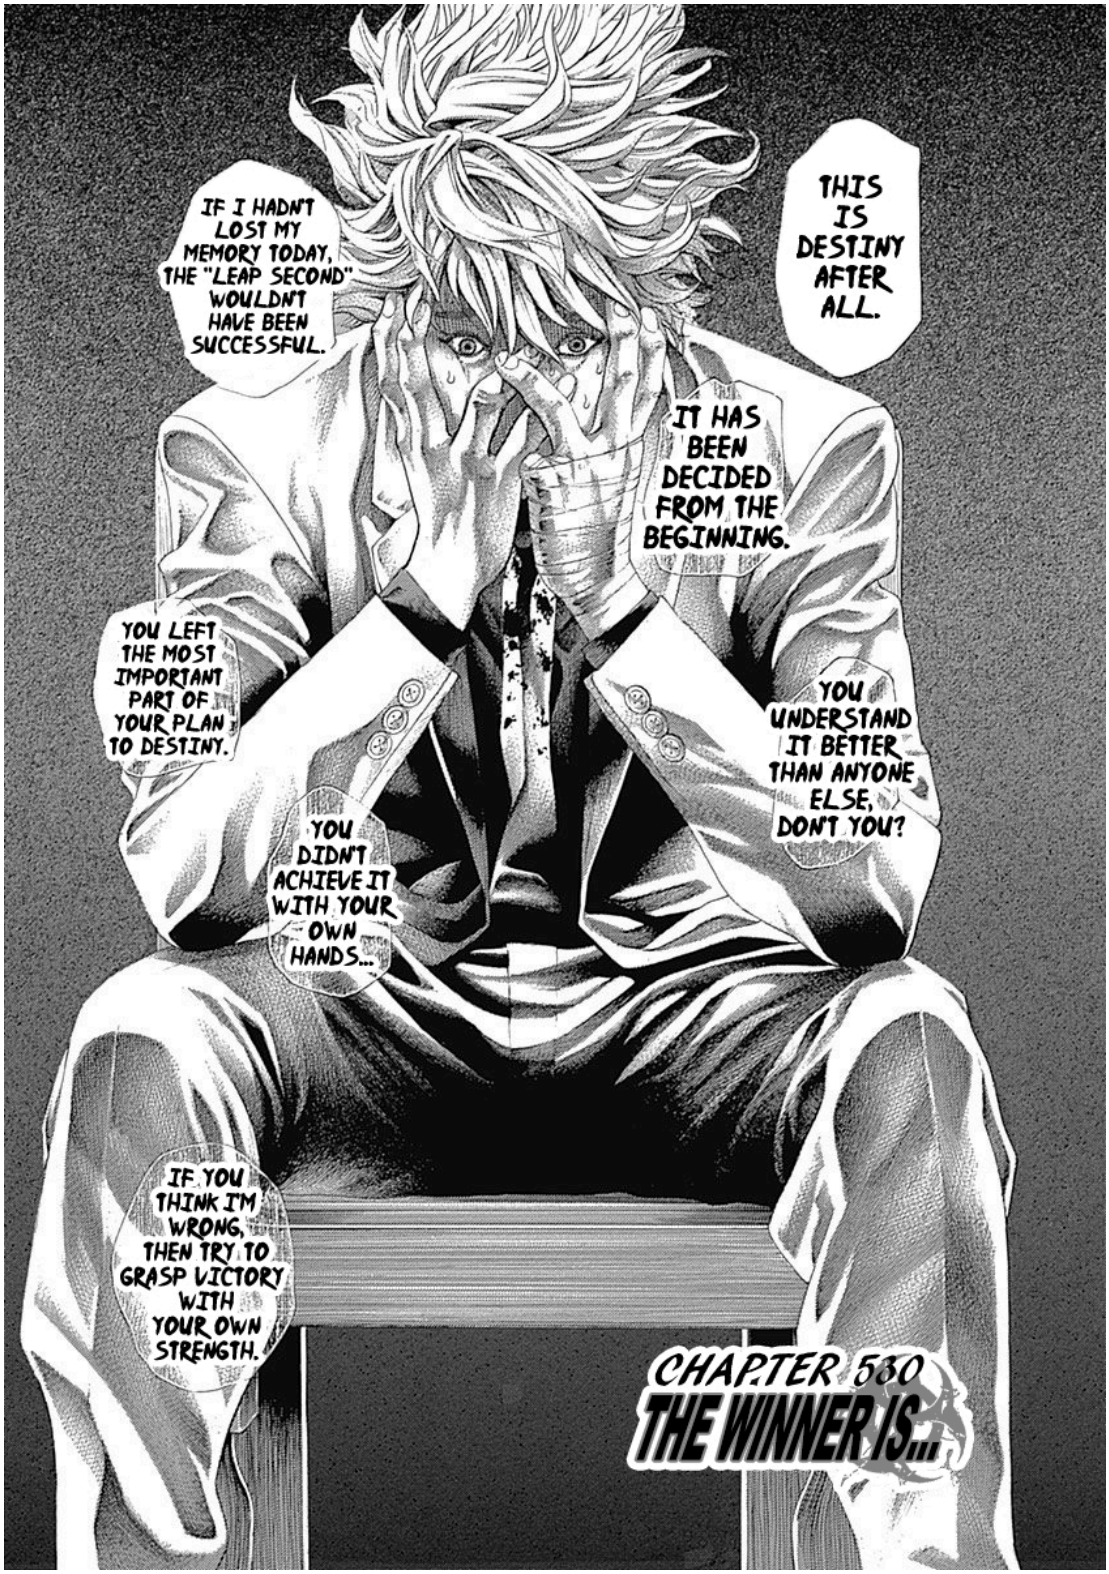

“If I hadn’t lost my memory, Leap Second wouldn’t be successful”

Domino’s debunk:

So Souichi in his near death sees his parents saying that there is a crisis awaiting ahead. The crisis is Souichi losing his memory today

Answer:

Agreed, and with it his knowledge of Leap Second as explained here:

Domino's debunk:

Here it shows again an writing aspect of Souichi "that thing was carved inside you" It show how Souichi will never be perfect if he continues to forgot his memory, if he continue to have 2 personna. This 2 personna block his full potential, if he didn't have them he would have deduced LS as he did there but he would also not forget it. Also if Souichi really had deduced it, then why is he struggling to deduce this truth when he literally knows it from the beginning?

"The 1 minute right now feels so short to me. Are these... the word i said? At that time, I saw him laughing... at that time..." This is again a panel proving that Souichi didn't deduce leap second before round 2, since he just remembered that when he told Baku something about time, Baku laughed.

Answer:

Hal has already concluded Baku will use Leap Second (already proved how).

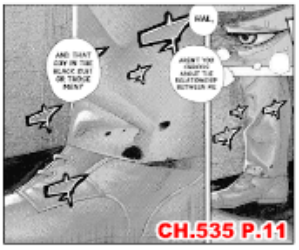

Hal can't remember Leap Second yet, because if he did and Baku saw through this then there is a chance Baku wouldn't drop the handkerchief in 61st second.

*Think about it, why would Baku want to drop the handkerchief on the 61st second knowing that Hal has caught up to LS?

By concealing his knowledge about Leap Second Hal would be able to have Baku drop the handkerchief on the 61st second like he intended. However Hal's "Perfect Mode" ran out of time and he lost his memory.

Domino's debunk:

THE FORESHADOWINGS WHICH ARE REVEALED IN THIS CHAPTER: THE BLOOD STAIN

BAKU'S PANTS WERE STAINED BY THE RAT'S BLOOD WHEN EBA KILLED THE RAT. AND HE WENT BACK TO THE HOTEL WITHOUT CLEANING IT. (THE BLOOD STAIN WAS FIRST SHOWN IN CH.321 P.14)

THE BLOOD STAIN IN SOUICHI'S DREAMS

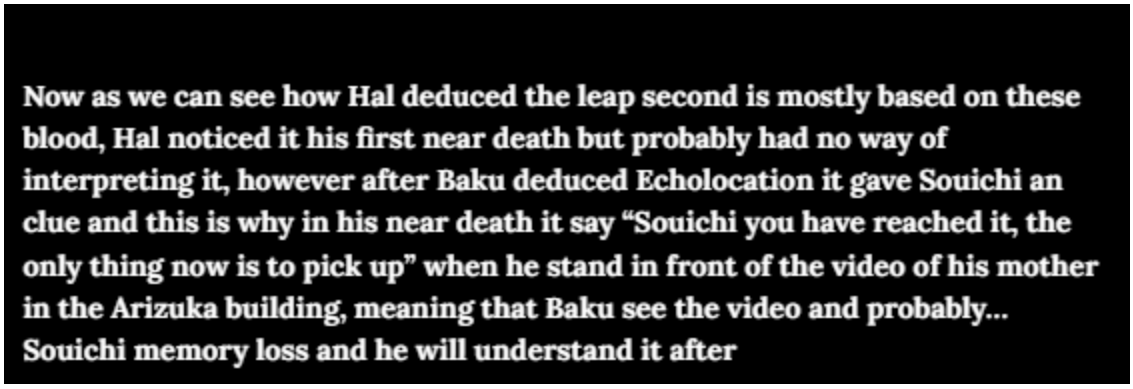

APPARENTLY, THIS BLEEDING SCENE IN SOUICHI'S FIRST NEAR-DEATH DREAM IS JUST SOUICHI NOTICING YAKOU'S CONDITION. (PRESSING THE BUTTONS REFERS TO HIM DOING CPR, AND THE OPENING OF THE FINGER AND THE BLEEDING REFERS TO YAKOU'S WOUNDED HAND.)
BUT THE BLOOD SQUIRTING ONTO THE PANTS ALSO SHOWS THAT SOUICHI ACTUALLY NOTICED THE BLOOD STAIN WHEN BAKU CAME BACK FROM THE ARIZUKA BUILDING 10 YEARS AGO.

AND THE SCENE WHERE BAKU CALLS SOUICHI A LIAR WHILE WIPING THE BLOOD STAIN SHOWS THAT SOUICHI REALIZED THAT BAKU PROBABLY GOT THE STAIN IN THE ARIZUKA BUILDING, WHICH ALSO MEANS THAT BAKU MIGHT HAVE SEEN EKO'S VHS AND LEARNT WHAT ECHOLOCATION IS.
THAT'S WHY BAKU WAS ABLE TO FIGURE OUT SOUICHI'S ECHOLOCATION TRICK SO FAST AND SOUICHI COULD AS WELL SUSPECTED THAT BAKU MIGHT HAVE FIGURED IT OUT.

Answer:

Baku seeing the VHS tapes has nothing to do with Leap Second, it has to do with Baku knowing how Hal loses his memory, which aligned with Leap Second, but didn't point at it (Hal already figured out Leap Second, as shown by the clock panel in the same Near-Death)

Major Rebunk 2

Domino's debunk:

This panel appear after Baku induce Echolocation and Hal say “i will be able to see it, that secret” as i explained before at that moment Hal was probably close to understand that Baku had seen the video

Answer:

Not at all, this panel very clearly refers to Leap Second. With enough time Hal won’t need to deceive Baku anymore and in his turn as C he will remember about Leap Second, checking at 61st second. “If it keeps going a little more”

Here is what ‘that secret’ actually was:

As I've already stated, if Baku realized that Hal anticipates LS, then whether he would drop the handkerchief in 61st second or not would be up to chance. Why would he drop the handkerchief on 61st second, while aware that this is when Hal aims to turn around?

Domino's debunk:

Answer, Major Rebunk 7:

Everything you just said is based on referees' interpretation who aren't aware of Hal's thoughts. Their perspective is flawed. They aren't aware that Hal opened up the chance for LSR on purpose to trade deaths with Baku while anticipating his actions, they aren't aware that Leader has lost his memory, they aren't aware of Hal's capabilities.
Even Yakou, whose explanation you used, had no way of seeing through Souichi's intentions at that time and only shared Baku's perspective. Yakou hears that 'Hal concluded about Leap Second but lost his memory' in the 10th hallucination round.

I already explained what happened, both in the 'Major Rebunks' here and Hal doc.

Domino's debunk:

Referee ; Many people think the referees are not reliable narrators for some reason, so let me explain why they are. THe referees are a device for the author to make us understand his game, this is always what they serve for, they are obviously not omniscient but they have enough information to understand the game, usogui plan. The only arguments I've seen from people thinking so is the arguments that they didn't know about Hal deducing LS or his memory loss, but one question, how does it affect their explanation of the plan? Can you explain to me how not knowing that affects Baku plan? it does not, the memory loss was just a MINI part of Baku, they don't need that information to explain it, they have enough information on the game to traduce the move of Baku into thought process to show us why he did that or that. They are narrative tools, why would sako try to explain so many things if everything is wrong? also all their explanation literally make sense, they explain Baku move logically, every explanation align with my interpretation when in Jojolon interpretation, Yakou saying Hal is misdirected, Ranko saying Baku had to died round 6, ranko saying Baku saw through Hal, Yakou stating that Baku saw through leader, Ranko explaining How Baku cornered Hal, Yakou implying that Baku calculated so much thing, all of this is wrong. Even the omniscient narrator who state 3 times that no one knows about Baku plan is also wrong :skull:

Answer:

They understood Baku's plan aside from him planning all of it the entire month ahead, while making Souichi lose his memory. What they explained was Baku's POV. Even though they get Baku's explanation right, they aren't aware of anything impressive Hal has made.

Referees explained in Major Rebunk 7

What Hal did was explained overall in Major Rebunks 1, 2, 3, 4…

Domino's debunk:

"Hal is a fodder" : One of Jojolon arguments was Hal not making sense in my interpretation that he was a fodder, so let's clear every misconception i've seen.

Round 3 : Souichi was trying to remember his death because the aura of Baku was so strong. Hal says "i went as far as dying" but this is contradicted just after, he still didn't had retrieves everything and didn't though he made an mistake, he was trying to remember if he did or no but at the same time Baku aura was there, this is why he didn't knew what he should do since he didn't even had enough information and thought that Baku would perfect if he dropped it, Hal was misdirected into the near three death strategy, he also had to understand that aura.His move does make sense

Answer:

Explained in Major Rebunk 2, 3 and other Major Rebunks.

Domino's debunk:

containers would be in Souichi Favor. Also if Hal knew about the leap second at round 2, when he lost PM then why did he not remember it ?

Answer:

Your sentence doesn't make sense.

"When he lost PM then why did he not remember it?"? When Hal lost PM was also when he had lost his memories (8th round)… for Hal to lose PM at that time it would have to be active in the first place.

Hal wasn't sure whether Baku still intends to use Leap Second or not, he connected the dots and reached the truth in his first near-death, but then forgot about it on purpose soon after being revived.

Domino's debunk:

I think i covered everything, my interpretation align perfectly with the narrative and all the referee explanation while jojolon doesn't.

Answer:

Domino's interpretation perfectly aligns with the interpretation of the people who never saw Hal's thoughts or narrator's statements, I agree.

Explained in Major Rebunks.

Domino's debunk:

here Yakou imply again what Baku had to do, calculate everything and he say it a second time in the chapter 528

Answer:

Yakou was specifically talking about what Baku has done, he wasn't aware of Hal's thoughts at all. He didn't know Souichi concluded about Leap Second before losing his memory, he didn't know that Hal seized 2 seconds on purpose either. Hal got 'revived' and said this only a while later.

Domino's debunk:

everything aligns so well in my interpretation when in his... every referee is wrong, the referee which serves as Narrative devices serves for nothing.

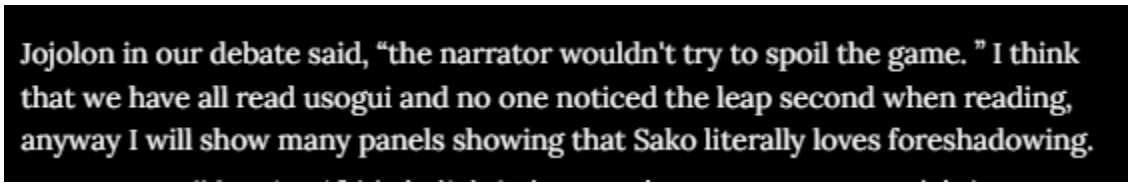

Answer:

Referees described Baku's plan very well (obviously not bringing up him planning for memory loss or anything since they can't be aware of it, as they are not omniscient, just like they can't be aware of Hal's actions). However, they didn't know about Hal's perspective and vastly underestimated him in comparison to Baku.

Domino is constantly talking from a writing perspective, completely ignoring the story, then imagine, from a writing perspective, how that would look if the narrator were to have 15 pages of pure explanations at the end explaining Hal's exact thinking process. Even going purely by writing perspective Domino's vision doesn't make sense.

Domino's debunk:

Answer:

Foreshadowing and spoilers are 2 different things, foreshadowing is indirect and subtle, something you most of the time pick up on a reread. Spoiler is direct revelation of what will happen exactly, mainly an important part of the story.

You should just search up the difference between the foreshadowing and spoilers instead.

Yakou’s explanation, writing-wise, couldn’t explain Hal’s POV as he wasn’t aware of his thoughts, he only learned about Hal seizing the 2 seconds and catching up to LS in the 10th ‘hallucination’ round. After this Yakou didn’t make any explanation, as for other referees, they weren’t aware of Hal’s thinking process at all.

Domino completely strawmanned my point by comparing spoilers to foreshadowing.

That’s the entire part about the actual debunk.

I didn’t want to risk hours of work in case Domino chooses himself a biased judge, I also didn’t know any scaler from the Usogui community fit for the role. I proposed we should just do this in a community post with the discussion being public.
He said that Whizerra agrees with almost everything in his interpretation (aside from one part), obviously I wouldn’t choose someone like that for a judge, I already explained my reasoning.

Answer

I would've been fine with it (even then, I never agreed to it), but in the reply he brought up a new point that wasn't elaborated on Discord.
I wanted to reply, yet he kept on removing my comments (despite me never agreeing to this).
He even started removing my replies against his friend in the same comment thread.

I never agreed with his '1 comment-1 comment' proposition either. Domino kept on removing my comments despite me asking him to stop. He even started removing my replies to his friend.

Answer

So basically Domino is saying I have to ask for his permission before trying to refute his point, on a public post, which tried to portray my doc in a bad light.

No, he didn't ask me if he can make this comment in the first place 💀.

> Then we started saying nonsense to each other, me trying to find a judge while him disagreeing with it. I wanted whizerra, but that was my fault i clearly know that i would have win with him i apologize, but at the same time Jojolon did the exact same

Answer

I said that hours beforehand, I was making fun of Domino's suggestion, especially when he asked for whizerra, who literally agrees with his interpretation.

Context

The insults began after he started removing my comments against my will. Neither of us are the victims of toxicity here.
